DR. JOHN MASON JOINS NASA

AiResearch Man Appointed to Serve on NASA

Dr. John Mason, 35, 1805 Pedro Place, Palos Verdes Estates, has been appointed to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) Advisory Committee on Mechanical Power Plant Systems, according to an announcement by T. Keith Glennan, NASA administrator.

Mason, employed by the Garrett Corporation's AiResearch Div., Los Angeles, joins 15 of this country's leading scientists who serve on the committee.

NASA, the nation's top scientific space agency, plans, directs and conducts aeronautical and space activities, except those associated with the defense of the United States. The Committee on Mechanical Power Plant Systems centers its interest on the conversion of heat energy to thrust and electrical energy and the transportation of fluids in spacecraft.

At AiResearch, Dr. Mason serves as chief of preliminary design, and has been employed with that company for nine years. An alumnus of California Institute of Technology where he received his baccalaureate and graduate degrees, he also holds a bachelor of science degree in meteorology from the University of Chicago.
