

Inventor of Space Clock Will Speak at El Camino on Feb. 21

Dr. I. M. Levitt, nationally-known scientist and director of Philadelphia's Fels Planetarium, will take the public on a "Journey Into Space" in a talk at El Camino College on Friday, Feb. 21, at 8:15 p.m.

The inventor of a "space clock" as well as an astronomer, Dr. Levitt is an authority on space travel. He has urged that the U. S. take the lead in launching a man-made device into space before Russia does so "with its possible tremendous psychological repercussions throughout the entire world." He proposes a man-made moon that would circle the earth at a height of 200 miles, traveling continuously around the earth.

Perpetual Travel
Besides representing perpetual space travel by a humanly-controlled device, such a satellite would be a tremendous step in the conquest of outer space and would provide many answers to questions scientists bound to the earth might take many years to solve.

When he speaks here, Dr. Levitt will explore the many hazards that face man in his efforts to undertake interplanetary travel, as well as the tremendous advances already made by forward-looking scientists toward that goal.

Public Invited
The public is invited to attend the lecture. Tickets will go on sale for one dollar in the college book store on Feb. 14. While reservations may be made by phone, tickets must be picked up before 8 p.m. on the evening of the lecture. Associated Student activity books will admit college students without charge.

Among his more intriguing recent inventions is the Hamilton Space Clock, which he developed especially to aid in charting journeys into space. The world's first interplanetary timepiece, it is designed to show the comparative passage of time—by the day, hour, month and year—on earth and on planets in outer space.

Important Clock
"To all space explorers, the clock would be a matter of life or death," explains Dr. Levitt. "For instance, they would need it to time departures from earth in order to reach destined spots on another planet during daylight hours, and at a suitable season. Also, it would be mighty handy in calculating the precise timing of their homeward journeys." This device, Dr. Levitt adds, is one of the first pieces of scientific apparatus which the world's future pioneers into outer space will require.

Dr. Levitt designed this first interplanetary clock for Mars since it is "the planet most likely to be the first visited by man once he has escaped the gravitational bondage of earth." Astronomical calculations relating time on other planets could be made as well, making provision for the different times it takes each planet to rotate.

Another of Dr. Levitt's inventions is the Pulse Counting Photoelectric Photometer which was one of two articles on electronics to win a place in the 1948 Encyclopedia Britannica Year Book.

WATER SOURCE

Duluth, like the city of Chicago, gets its water supply by extending pipes two to eight miles off-shore in the Great Lakes to escape city-caused pollution.
