Realtors Hailed For Housing Job By Assemblyman

By VINCENT THOMAS
 Assemblyman
 The millions of new Californians who have moved into our great state during the past ten years would not be nearly so well housed as they are if it were not for the gigantic job performed by our realtors, subdividers, and home builders. The success of their combined efforts in producing enough new homes, not only to meet population growth, but also to give improved housing to every resident who demanded it, is a modern-day miracle, one for which we should all be grateful.

This enormous achievement was primarily made possible by the vision, courage, and ability of the men who planned, arranged for financing them, and built the hundreds of thousands of homes now enjoyed by our new fellow-residents. But an important factor in helping them to accomplish their great objectives was the workable and sensible legislation on real estate, subdivisions, land use and planning which had been patiently worked out by your legislature, with the cooperation of the industries and governmental agencies involved over a period of many years.

If the body of law had not been really practical in addition to providing necessary safeguards for the homeowner as well as the general public, it might have proved a major obstacle to providing a roof over the head of every Californian. But whether a city or county planning ordinance was involved, basic state law made it possible for the real estate and construction industries to meet the huge demands imposed upon them by the largest mass movement of human beings in recorded history.

If there is one basic axiom which your legislators have had impressed upon them in connection with real estate and home building law, it is that conditions in that field change with even more bewildering rapidity than they do in women's fashions. No sooner is one new problem dealt with by new or changed law, than another pops up, needing investigation and perhaps action. As is the case with all other types of business activity, there are always a few "marginal operators" who endeavor to take individuals who need housing, or who wish to sell what they own. Over the years, your legislature and ethical businessmen in real estate and construction have together learned the importance of closing all possible legal loopholes to stop such gangsters from defrauding the public, and giving the industries a completely unobscured black eye.

Shortly before our 1957 session it became apparent that another kind of fraud was being perpetrated on the public under the guise of "advance fee" listings of homes or businesses, offered for sale, exchange or lease. In this racket, unscrupulous promoters collected fees in advance for promised advertising and other sales promotion of homes or business properties, then never sent their promises to do the advertising. To plug this gap in the real estate licensing law, a bill was introduced in that session which would make the "advance fee" business fully subject to real estate license laws, and would give the state real estate commissioner authority to supervise the business.

For further study, this bill was referred to the Assembly Housing Committee on Governmental Efficiency and Economy. A sub-group of that committee held preliminary hearings on the bill, and will hold others as needed.
