unsuccessfully and know our very own. He'd make a ideal husband, wouldn't he?

He has such terrible eating habits I'm ashamed to accept dinner invitation with him particularly in a private home. He heaps such enormous portions on his plate, five or three helpings, that it shocks everyone. He uses the bread as a "pusher" and puts three pads of butter on a baked potato. Of course he overeats then complains of discomfort all evening.

This fellow was very devoted to his mother who passed away two years ago. He told me she was the world's best cook. Do you think there is any connection?

I'd marry him if it weren't for this one fault, but I can't bear the thought of eating three meals a day with a pig. Dare I mention this? Or shall I drop him?—Kelen

There is undoubtedly a very real connection between your friends' gluttony (this is more than just bad manners) and his association with his mother. If he could work this out with a therapist, it would be time and money well spent.

By all means mention this to him. Since he has so many excellent qualities you'd be a fool to drop him because of this one "fault." It would be like throwing out the baby with the bath-water.

Dear Ann: I'm writing this letter from Hahn Air Force base in Germany. My home is Peoria, Illinois, and my folks send me your column over here.

That letter from "The Visitor" who knocked America really burned me up. I've been all over Europe and let me tell you there's no place like home.

The motorists here are so gungone reckless a person actually takes his life in his hands on a country road in Italy. I roared when I read "The Visitor's" criticism on drunkenness in America. One of the first things that struck me over here was the hoop-de-do at the wine festivals. These holidays last a week. Everyone from 12 years of age on up is drunk the whole time.

When I hear people comment on how happy the French and Italians are, I have to laugh. They aren't happy—they're stiff. Sincerely Yours, —Airman Roy L. A.
