YOUR PROBLEMS
by Ann Landers

"She's Been in Trouble..."

Dear Ann: My husband's sister is 29. She's been in trouble with the law, twice divorced, lived with three men that I know of, drinks like a fish and swears like a mule skinner. She has struck her mother several times, once injuring her badly.

Last week this sister-in-law took our 15-year-old girl to dinner. The restaurant turned out to be a beer-joint. When my husband and I learned of this we were furious. She claims no harm was done since "the kid drank only coke."

Our daughter admires her aunt's "independent spirit" and would like to be "just like her."

My husband says henceforth his sister is not welcome in our home until she changes of her own volition or seeks professional help. His mother says if our home isn't open to ALL members of the family, she's staying away, too. She claims no harm was done since "the kid drank only coke."

If your husband doesn't want his sister in his home, it's HIS business. If his mother wishes to stay away, it's HER business. I suspect you won't miss either of them very much.

Your sister-in-law has been in need of professional help for quite some time. Subjecting an impressionable 15-year-old girl to this sick personality showed faulty judgment on your part. Now you must try to teach your daughter the difference between an "independent spirit" and rash irresponsible behaviour which interferes with the rights of others. Good luck.

Dear Ann Landers: That letter about the screaming mother was pretty close to home. I'm sure the neighbors were talking about me. Soooooo I'm a screamer so what? I'd like to tell you how the world looks through the eyes of a Screaming Mother.

The good Lord gave me a wonderful set of lips. I scream when I'm mad and I scream when I'm glad. My three children know when I speak if mean scream I mean business. They are the best kids in the whole world.

A pearl tiara held her illusion veil and she carried an arrangement of white roses atop a white mistle. Mr. Ban escorted his daughter to the altar.
