State Surveying Public Opinion About Accidents

By VINCENT THOMAS, Assemblyman
 One of the most comprehensive public opinion surveys ever made is just being completed by the Senate Interim Committee on Prevention of Automobile Accidents. Designed to secure first-hand knowledge about what drivers themselves think about problems connected with auto accidents, the study has already produced more than 315,000 replies. Thousands are still pouring in.
 The survey is based on replies to questionnaires intended to determine whether drivers know the basic factors which cause traffic accidents. The committee itself printed and distributed 290,000 copies. An additional 270,000 copies were printed in newspapers or reproduced by insurance companies, safety organizations, farm groups and the state employees' assn.

FROM THE SIZE of the response received the committee has concluded that drivers and the general public are seriously concerned with auto accident prevention and improvement in highway safety. Prevention of the unnecessary deaths, injuries, and property damage which occur daily on our California highways is generally recognized as a problem of prime importance to everyone in the State.
 Preliminary results of the survey were released at the start of three days of public hearings by the committee in Sacramento, to which were invited leaders in traffic safety from private companies, civic and labor organizations, and governmental agencies in all parts of the State. Hearings will be continued elsewhere in the State until December, in order to give everyone who desires an opportunity to present his views.

FOURTEEN DIFFERENT areas of opinion on highway safety were touched upon in the questionnaire, and several phases were approached from more than one direction in order to bring out differences of opinion. Many who replied took the trouble either to write comments on the forms, or to write complete letters outlining their viewpoints.
 Some of the results may be indicative of the committee's eventual recommendations to the 1959 Legislature. An increase in the speed limit from 55 to 65 miles per hour was approved by 64 per cent of those replying. Fixing a night speed limit lower than that for daylight driving was approved by 72 per cent, but the answers were almost evenly split as to whether the night limit should be set at 30 miles an hour.

MORE AND BETTER traffic education of drivers was demanded by an overwhelming majority of those replying, including behind the wheel training for students before they reach license age, and more rigid and comprehensive driver's license examinations. Mandatory chemical tests for those suspected of driving while under the influence of alcohol were also endorsed by a considerable margin.
 Stricter enforcement of all traffic laws, and establishment of traffic courts with specially trained judges both were approved by substantial percentages. Compulsory annual inspection of all cars for electrical, mechanical, or braking defects was also endorsed. So also was the posting of more traffic warning signs about dangerous or unusual road conditions.
