Veterans' Tax Exemption Poses State Problem

By VINCENT THOMAS
 Assemblyman, 68th District

One of the most ticklish problems, politically speaking, which confronts our legislators is that of the ever-increasing impact of the $1000 veterans' property tax exemption on the units of local government in California. In the last 10 years the combined value of such exemptions has more than doubled, and now exceeds $968 million. During the same period the additional tax bill other taxpayers must pick up per year because of the exemption has almost tripled, and now tops $65 million.

For the past year a subcommittee of the Senate Interim Committee on Districts has been studying the effect of this exemption on local agencies. It first prepared a comprehensive factual report on the problem, the statistics of which certainly demonstrate the serious nature of the problem in those counties and other local units in which veterans are concentrated. This report made no recommendations, but did list 14 possible alternatives for action. These ranged from leaving things as they are, through having the state reimburse local units for the "lost" revenue, to complete repeal of the exemption.

THE SUBCOMMITTEE used these alternatives as the basis for its recent public hearing, to which were invited state research and tax agencies, local officials and representatives of veterans' organizations. This meeting served one very important purpose. That was to assure several veterans' groups that the subcommittee is not already committed to recommend any form of legislative action proposing either repeal or any kind of change in the constitutional provision. Subcommittee hearings, including those scheduled for November, are exploratory, and intended to give every group concerned with the problem an opportunity to present its facts and opinions.

IN RESPONSE to questions of the group, the legislative analyst's office gave estimates as to the financial results of various alternatives, which are here adjusted to latest assessments. Four of these are most significant. Requiring the State to reimburse the local units for the "lost" revenue would transfer the whole $65 million for this year and larger sums for each succeeding year from property taxpayers to the state treasury. To limit the exemption to veterans who entered the service from California would reduce the cost to other taxpayers to about $35 1/2 million this year. Limiting it to "disabled" veterans would reduce the cost to about $11 million. Granting it to each veteran only for the first 10 years after discharge would cut the cost to about $10 1/2 million.

The Board of Equalization furnished the subcommittee with detailed tabulations on the amount and effect of the exemption from its beginning in 1912. The board fixed the cost to date of the exemption to non-exempt taxpayers at more than $382 million.

ONE VETERANS' organization offered a bold and thoughtful program for restricting the benefit to California veterans who saw actual service in real conflicts, but liberalizing its terms for the truly disabled or for widows and other survivors. Other organizations reserved their testimony until they complete their study of the subcommittee and other reports.

Legislation on the veteran's exemption will require affirmative action by the committee, the whole legislature and the voters. The subcommittee is performing a valuable service for all these groups in gathering all the facts and information for their use.
