YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"Take Out Girls You Like . . ."

Dear Ann: I'm male, 18 and having trouble with my mother. She has picked to peacocks every girl I ever liked until I broke off with her or she gave me the air. The last chick I went with was a doll. We got along swell—until my mother phoned her and told her to cut her hair and lose a few pounds. That did it.

Not only does Mom make trouble with girls I like, she goes ahead on her own and fixes up dates with daughters of her friends. You should see some of the pigs I've had to take out. She lets me drive her car (mine is a jalopy) and she slips me an extra 10-spot when I take out a girl of her choosing.

Dad and Mom are separated so don't tell me to ask my father for help. I haven't seen him in five years. The kid next door wrote you about his problem and you helped him a lot. How about me?—Frank.

Tell your mother the next time she makes a date for you "on her own" to be prepared to take the girl out herself. It would help, too, if you'd quit accepting extra 10-spots and the family car. This is part of the lingo, Dummy.

Take out the girls YOU like and hope they are bright enough to understand the situation if Mom phones them with "helpful hints."

Since your dad is nowhere in sight YOU are the man in your mother's life which is why she is mixing into your social affairs more than she should. Try to understand her problems, but don't let her wreck YOUR life, TOO.

Dear Ann: I need advice in a hurry. My mother-in-law is in her early 60's. She insists my husband drive her back 100, a family reunion. She hasn't seen some of her relatives for many years. We will have to go into debt to make the trip and I could use the money much better elsewhere.

We also have a son who is a senior in high school. He would have to stay home alone and get along as best he could. He's a good boy but he's not very handy when it comes to taking care of himself and fixing meals.

My husband wants to take her but he says if I don't drive along he will not make the trip. I will leave it up to you. Do I owe it to my husband to charter his mother across the country or should I stay home?
