Poorly Cooked Pork May Carry Trachina, Health Officer Says

By ROY D. GILBERT, M.D.,
County Health Officer
Trichinosis is primarily a disease of hogs that are fed on garbage containing remnants of trichinous pork. The infection may also be carried by rats, cats, dogs, bears, and other animals. Unfortunately, it may be transmitted to man, and, in the majority of instances, the only way a person gets the disease is by eating pork that is insufficiently cooked.

THE INFANT worms, or larvae, pass through the intestinal wall into the blood stream and lodge in the muscles of the human body where they eventually build up a wall or cyst around themselves. The severity of the disease depends upon the number of living larvae that are eaten. Some years ago it was estimated that about 16,000,000 persons in the United States were infected. Fortunately, the infection is generally not of a serious nature.

SYMPTOMS THAT may occur in severe infections include nausea and vomiting, diarrhea or constipation, and abdominal cramps which result from the irritation of the intestinal tract by the adult worms. Fever and swelling of the eyelids are also common and early symptoms. Inflammation in the muscle fibers is noticed in the form of swelling or pain, particularly when the individual uses the muscles involved.

THERE ARE WAYS of preventing the transmission of trichinosis to human beings. The community approach to the problem is through the control of garbage disposal and feeding to prevent infection of hogs fed on garbage, while the maintenance of good sanitation, including rodent control, is also required. In Los Angeles County, these tasks are supervised by health departments and the Los Angeles County Livestock Department.
