YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"Instructor Showing Familiarity . . ."

Dear Ann: What can a woman who belongs to an exclusive club do about a swimming instructor who is showing too much familiarity? I find myself taking his hands off me from the moment I enter the pool.

For years I've tried without success to learn to swim. This instructor is the best I've ever had. I hate to discontinue the lessons.

I'm reluctant to report him because I don't wish to jeopardize his job and I don't want to look foolish. He could make a good case for himself by claiming he must handle me to give proper instruction. And then I am aware that to the outsider, I might be labeled "a little off" because I'm rather plain looking in both face and figure, and definitely not the type men go for.

The instructor is married and has two grandchildren. I can't tell my husband, because he'd go right to the club director and start a major war. Please advise me.—B.A.C.

Dear B.A.C.: The direct approach is best. Tell Water Boy the next time he gets too handy.

"I know I'm a silly old woman, but I wish you wouldn't put your hands on me unless it's absolutely necessary. I'm ticklish, and besides, others may get the wrong impression of you Gramps, and we wouldn't want that, would we?"

Dear Ann: I've been going with this real doll for about a year. I'll start by admitting she's 22. I am 43, although she thinks I'm 35. I met her through a buddy. She used to go with him until he decided to go back to his wife.

This chick is more fun than anyone I've ever known. She's a marvelous dancer and a champion bowler. She's a good-hearted kid and sends her mother $100 every month.

This is the hitch. She gets the hundred from me. The poor kid can't work because of asthma spells. I also pay her living expenses.

Don't give me a lecture on morals. I know she's not taking me for a chump. She likes me plenty and is true blue. I'm no juvenile, and I have plenty of money to spend. I enjoy her company and I love to do things for people. My (Continued on Page 12)
