Water Recreation Projects Must Provide Maximum Benefits to All

By VINCENT THOMAS
Assemblyman, 68th District
Everyone likes to relax. Each of us has his favorite form, but all of us like recreation. That is why fish and game, beaches and parks, and boating are important functions of state government. But our ever-teeming population creates a real problem in keeping recreational facilities adequate for all who want to use them.

A new law enacted at our recent session marks another milestone in our development of public facilities for play and relaxation by all Californians. Drafted after more than a year's work by the Assembly Fish and Game Committee, the statute will do much to assure sufficient facilities for the years to come.

THE ACT establishes as a basic state policy the fact that the general health and welfare require that all water projects be so constructed and operated as to obtain maximum benefits in the preservation of fish and wildlife, and in recreation generally. Thus, all of our water resources as developed under the master plan will be so built as to increase recreation facilities.

Under the law, the department of water resources is required to provide for the preservation and enhancement of fish and wildlife, and for the development of such facilities as camp grounds, picnic sites, and boat ramps in making plans for all future water projects. The department, however, is granted specific authority to forbid the development of any facility which would interfere with delivery of water from a project.

THE DEPARTMENT of fish and game is granted the responsibility for fish and game preservation and enhancement in connection with all state water projects. The department of natural resources, through its division of beaches and park, recreation and small boats, is assigned the management of camping and picnic grounds, boat ramps and sanitary facilities. The law says specifically that it is the legislative intent that there shall be full and close coordination between all three departments in planning for fish, game and recreational facilities at all water projects, and that they shall also work closely with appropriate federal and local agencies.

"Recreational purposes" are defined to include all the forms of recreation generally associated with the out-of-doors. Camping, picnicking, fishing, water and power. Those for the hunting, water contact sports, boating and sightseeing are mentioned as examples. "Facilities" includes campgrounds, picnic areas, sanitary facilities, parking areas, viewpoints, and boat ramps.

THE COSTS of any development under the program are to be met in two ways. Those for the preservation of fish and wildlife are to be charged back to purchasers of project enhancement of fish and wild life, and for recreation, will be met from the state's general fund. The law says directly that it is the legislative intent that there shall be included in the budget bill for 1962-63, and for each year thereafter, an appropriation for enhancement and recreation.

Recreational facilities attract thousands of visitors annually from both without and within California.

Blind Youngsters Enjoying Stay At Malibu Mountain Campsite

Ten blind Torrance children, members of the Foundation for the Junior Blind, are enjoying a two-week outing, which began last Saturday at the organization's Camp Bloomfield, in the Malibu Mountains, announced Norman Kaplan, executive director of this non-profit organization.

By summer's end, 254 blind youngsters will have enjoyed the facilities of this unique camp.

The local children, along with other Foundation members, will be assembled at the Foundation's recreation center at 4005 Wilshire Blvd., by volunteer drivers who bring them in from communities all over Los Angeles area as well as Southern California. From here they will be driven to the Malibu Mountain camp. Among local people who have been driving children to Foundation events are: Members of the Torrance Lions Club, Mr. and Mrs. Ken Bragg, Mr. Don Jones, Dr. Philip Karr, John Ritchie and Roy Smith.

CAMP ACTIVITIES will include morning calisthenics, swimming, horseback-riding, hiking, boxing, wrestling, fishing, boating, and various sports.

One of the favorite activities is baseball, which is played with a 16-inch ball and is rolled towards the batter. The catcher claps his hands so that the pitcher knows in which direction to roll the ball. A strip of tin foil placed two inches in front of the batter's plate, makes enough noise when the ball rolls over it so that the batter is able to gauge when to swing. Different sounding noisemakers at each base, enable the runners to find the bases and the fielders to field the ball.

THE CHILDREN enjoy archery in which they aim at the sound of a buzzer in the center of the bull's eye. The target is made up of round metal discs which give off varying sounds when hit, enabling the archer to score himself.

In addition to the more robust activities, will be classes in dramatics, music, nature study and folk dancing and many more.

A Braille newspaper, published by the blind children each day, will be read at the evening campfires.

THE YOUNGSTERS will be supervised by a well-qualified staff of 52, many of whom have served the foundation for years.

Eight A-frame masonry cottages and an infirmary are now under construction at Camp Bloomfield and director Norman Kaplan, hopes to have them completed by mid-summer. Meanwhile, the children will live in tents and will be fed in a combined kitchen-dining hall that has been on the property for several years.

"THE AIM of the foundation primarily, is to provide these sightless children with all the same life experiences that are afforded seeing children," states Kaplan. "It is our goal to give them the greatest possible opportunity to grow up as normal, well-rounded individuals, with their lack of sight merely a limitation, not a handicap." "To be able to ride a horse, play baseball, do all the things sighted children do, instills a happiness and a self-confidence that can change the entire course of a blind child's life."

The time has come when you can dig those Daffodils that bloomed last spring. And the question naturally arises, "Is digging really necessary?" According to the California Assn. of Nurserymen, digging seems to result in better bloom though it's not really necessary unless clumps are quite crowded.
