YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"Punishment Is NOT The Answer . . ."

Dear Ann Landers: Our 17-year-old son is crazy about a girl who is 15. She looks and acts much older as all the girls seem to these days. The other night he had a date with her to go to a dance. He took the family car and promised to be home at a reasonable hour.

At 2:30 a.m. when he rolled in we could see that he had been drinking. The car had a broken headlight and a smashed fender. He and his girl had gotten into an argument and she left the dance with another fellow. Our son followed them in his car and finally plowed into them.

My husband thinks we should not allow him to date for a year, until after he graduates from high school. I'm afraid this punishment is too severe and that it will make him bitter. We need your advice.

—FRAYED NERVES

Dear Frayed: A boy of 17 who behaves as this one did sounds out of control. I doubt that the restrictions your husband wants to impose would get the desired results. The boy would feel like a caged lion and his resentment would grow until he did something drastic to get out.

"Punishment is not the answer. He needs guidance from a professional. Ask your doctor to direct you. And get going."

Dear Ann Landers: If it's good manners to tip a maid in the house after you've visited there for a week or two and put her to extra trouble, why shouldn't the woman who owns the house get the same consideration when there is no maid?

You may think I'm balmy, but something ought to be done about friends and relatives who want to see the country free without joining the navy.

People who travel ought to be willing and happy to pay a hostess $5 a day for room and board, extra towels, cigarettes, liquor, TV, radio and telephone services. Where else can they get all of this for $5?

I've talked to a few other women and they think I have a wonderful idea. Will you back this plan? You could be a major force in liberating the American housewife — especially during the summer months.

Thank you. —MARY K
