

WHILE IN ROME... North High senior Jeri Lynn Creekmore thought the old saw, "While in Rome..." was probably appropriate in Turkey, also, and while there this summer donned native attire and carried water from a nearby well as the Turkish women do in the village of Eregli where she stayed for part of her tour.

Summer Trek Proves Exciting for Saxon

Just another summer turned out to be quite an exciting and unforgettable experience for North High senior Jeri Lynn Creekmore.

Through the American Field Service, Jeri was able to spend a month in Turkey living with the Gulsevis, the Turkish family with whom she stayed.

The dictionary was the bond between her and her Turkish family as they spoke very little English. Inci, Jeri's 17-year-old "sister," could speak a little English while her brother, 15, and her younger sister, 6, did not speak English at all.

DURING HER STAY in Turkey, Jeri lived in three houses in three different towns: Corlu, Eregli, and Bakukoy.

"I liked living in Eregli, which is a village where all the peasants live, because it was the most interesting!" Jeri stated and went on to explain that the people there dressed very differently, especially the girls.

In the city they wear American clothes, but in Eregli, they wore black skirts with a black headpiece that came down to drape around the shoulders like a shawl. Black was worn as a sign of being conservative, but only in the villages. It is against the law to wear this sort of dress in the cities.

DIFFERENT CUSTOMS were many, but Jeri found those having to do with the teenagers were comparatively few. They give up what we would consider our three most important privileges. If we had the same customs as those of Turkey, the girls would have to give up makeup, all but lipstick which they are allowed to wear after they are 18 years old.

The boys would have to give up their most prized possession, cars. In Turkey, cars are strictly for the rich and the roads are strictly not for cars.

The third privilege we would have to do without would be dating. Turkish teenagers dates and marriages are left in the hands of the parents.

THERE WAS only one person who was rather glad to see our AFS student leave. That was the postman.

"He had to go one mile out of his way because I was the only one in the village that got any mail. But even with my leaving, he'll still have to go a mile out of his way because now, Inci, my sister, is getting mail," Jeri states.

This senior who terms herself as being "one of the luckiest girls in the world," made many friends in a country far across the ocean.

Movies To Be Shown at White

Movies will be shown the last half of the fourth period lunch at White Junior High school every Tuesday and Thursday, it was announced today. Tickets will be sold at 5 cents each, during nutrition and lunch. A good attendance to defray the cost is needed to continue this program.

A Round Table, supervised by Mrs. Iola Watkins, has appointed a committee to pick the movies from the film library.

Aeronca Names Ninteman to Regional Sales

A new defense products group regional manager for the western region of the United States was announced yesterday by John P. Lawler, vice president of marketing for Aeronca Manufacturing Corp.

Lawler said that Dean N. Ninteman was promoted to the position effective immediately. Prior to his recent promotion, Ninteman was a corporate representative and director of technical services for Aeronca. He joined Aeronca when the firm purchased the Longren Aircraft Corp. At that time, Ninteman was customer relations director for Longren.

IN HIS new position, Ninteman will be responsible for the management, planning, organization, direction, and control of Aeronca's defense products sales organization in the 11 western states. Ninteman's office will be located here at 24751 S. Crenshaw Blvd. Aeronca has defense divisions located in Baltimore, Md., and Middletown, Ohio, as well as the local division. These organizations are currently involved in research, development and production of high temperature structural components, electronics, ground support equipment, as well as other sophisticated items for the fast changing space age, Lawler said.

A native of Southern California, Ninteman was educated in that area and received his
