City Planning Commission Misnamed, Candidate Says

David K. Lyman, Torrance attorney and candidate for Torrance City Council, stated at a meeting of Torrance homeowners that the Torrance Planning Commission was misnamed and did not perform any planning function but was rather a body that passed on zoning matters. Lyman stated that an attempt has been made by some city officials to create the impression that the so-called Planning Commission was staffed with people expert in community planning.

"This is not true," he said. "A city planner is an individual who has a background in engineering and architecture and has studied the many theories of community development. The city of Torrance is in dire need of this type of assistance."

LYMAN continued that the first step to correct this situation would be to name the Planning Commission what it is—a Zoning Commission. Then the planning phase, which at present is not being performed, could be handled by people who are expert in their field. A true planning commission should be made up of experts who act in an advisory capacity, making recommendations to the zoning commission or the city council.

The lack of proper planning in the past is presently making itself felt through the inability of the City to do anything in regard to the sump in North Torrance where a small boy recently drowned. The City Attorney stated in his talk to the people of North Torrance that the community was bound by variances and zoning rules laid down by the previous city councils and that once a person is given a property right he has the full force of the Constitution protecting it and the city is powerless to change it.
