

Professor Tells of Need For Women Physicists

An increasing demand for physicists will open more doors to women in that field. Prof. Harriet Forster of the University of Southern California's physics department said yesterday.

Speaking in connection with a campaign by the American Institute of Physics to encourage talented girls to prepare for careers in physics, Dr. Forster said new developments in science will necessitate the use of women to fill the gap between the need for good physicists and the available supply of qualified men in that field.

"IT IS A fascinating, challenging and rewarding work," Dr.

Forster said, "There are many bright girls who would enjoy it and find great satisfaction in it."

Women in other countries go into physics more frequently than in the United States, she commented. "There seems to be no feeling abroad that interest in physics implies lack of femininity," she said. "Attending an international conference of physicists at England last summer, I was impressed by the small proportion of women attending from the United States in comparison to those in delegations from France and Germany."

THERE NEED be no conflict between a career in physics and homemaking, she declared, "Even if a woman physicist withdraws from active work while her children are young, she will keep reading and learning. When her children are older, she can return to her profession. Or she can, as some women have done, work part time while home demands are most heavy. Arrangements can be made, if the interest is great enough."

Dr. Forster took her training in Vienna and at the University of California at Berkeley. She joined the USC faculty in 1948.

Assemblyman Thomas Outlines Last Hours of Budget Session

By VINCENT THOMAS
Assemblyman, 68th District

For the second time in recent years the budget bill failed to pass in our just adjourned budget session. This means that the spending program for 1962-63 must be adopted in special session.

Otherwise, there would be no money legally approved for state operations next year.

The defeat of the bill was not entirely unexpected. Because of differences between the contents of the bill as passed by the Senate and the Assembly, it was sent to "free conference." This group, made up of three Senators and three Assemblymen, had the job of reconciling the variations between the two houses.

AFTER LONG hours of discussion, the conference committee succeeded in hammering out an agreed compromise. Only twenty minutes before the legal end of the session, the Senate adopted the compromise by a one-sided 34-2 vote. The result was the opposite in the Assembly. The compromise budget failed to receive the necessary two-thirds majority. The 45-33 vote which killed the bill was almost on strict party lines.

Prior to this, Assembly Republicans had been working under tight party discipline to have all of the four bond issues proposed by the Governor, and included in the call for the special session, put on the November ballot. It had been proposed that two of them, totalling $470 million, be placed on the June primary ballot. Republican strength, in an Assembly divided 44-34 against them, proved insufficient to achieve their desired result. However, they did succeed in holding up final action on the veterans' farm and home bond issue, which required a two-thirds vote to go on the June ballot.

STOPPED IN their first effort to have all bond issues put on one ballot in November, members of the party switched strategy. A bill was introduced by an influential Republican which called for all four proposed bond issues to be put on the June ballot, and for transfer of the $100 million aged housing bond measure of 1961 from the November to the June ballot. Demand was made that the Democratic administration accept this proposal, as the price for the necessary two-thirds vote needed for final passage in the Assembly. There had been no dispute between the two parties as to the amounts of the proposed bond issues.

When the compromise budget bill came before the Assembly at the tail-end of the budget session, the demand for action on the bond issues had not yet been completely answered. Most Republicans adhered to their previously announced stand for economies in the budget, which were not in the compromise bill, so it failed to pass for lack of the two-thirds vote.

LATER THE Assembly passed the bill to put all bond issues on the June ballot with only a single opposing vote. The Senate expedited its action on the matter, and passed the bill the same day.

Failure to pass the budget bill left the Governor with two alternatives. He could either add the budget as an additional item on the agenda of the current special session, or call a separate session with it as the only major subject. He decided to call a separate session, to start April 9.

While many legislators are working hard to clear the agenda of the current special session by the end of the week in which I am writing this, others are inclined to act more slowly, so that the two sessions will overlap beginning on the 9th. A new budget bill has to be introduced in the new special session, printed and distributed. Its contents are of concern to all of us, and some are saying that action on matters now before us should perhaps be delayed until we know what is in the new bill.

"The popularity of baseball pales beside that of our Number 1 participation sport, bowling — on which its devotees spent 12 times as much in 1960 as the total major league baseball gate receipts." —John Van Kleeck, Oxford (N.Y.) Review-Times.
