New Labor Inventory Network Goes to Work

A new labor inventory communications system aimed at meeting the job replacement demands of the Space Age became operative Monday, Irving H. Perluss, director of employment, announced.

Linking the Department of Employment's seven professional network offices and area offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco with the central office in Sacramento, the new system known as "LINCUS WEST" is the first step in a two-phased program planned to broaden service to employers and professional job applicants, Perluss said.

The new teletype system is designed to speed the matching of applicants and job openings, and to offer wider opportunities for using the skills of professionally trained people.

PERLUSS said the network is expected to cut from two to three days off the time now required to exchange job information by letter among the department's professional offices, and will permit more effective organization of the labor market.

Legion Backs Proposition Against Reds

All California members of the American Legion have been asked to give their support to passage of Proposition 24, the so-called Francis Amendment relating to subversive activities in California.

In a statement issued this week from the Department of California headquarters in San Francisco this week, the American Legion reported that the executive committee of the state organization had endorsed the proposal last March and had asked Legionnaires to help circulate the initiative petitions.

Again in June, the Legion considered the question at the Department Convention in Fresno and the delegates adopted a resolution supporting the proposal.

"Support of Proposition 24 is therefore a mandated program of The American Legion, and all Legionnaires are urged to give their support to passage of the measure," the statement said.
