Controversial Issues to Plague Current Assembly

By VINCENT THOMAS
Assemblyman, 68th District
We Americans are not given to riotous legislative assemblies. If it were not for that tradition, I might almost predict that our current session would be one of the most riotous in many generations. From the wide variety of proposals being laid before us, it is certain to be one of the most controversial sittings in some time.

In addition to increases in highway user taxes, milk price controls, and suspension or repeal of the death penalty, about which I have already written in this column, we have had laid before us the bulk of the state administration program as set forth in the governor's inaugural address.

This enumerated a long list of additional subjects, all of them important, which will more than fill our time in the months to come.

AFTER REPEATING his earlier promises to submit a balanced budget, calling for no new or increased taxes, and elimination of income taxes for low-bracket families, the governor gave first priority to the needs of public education. He suggested legislation to further equalize tax burdens as between school districts, and also that all new state funds be used for equalization.

He declared that a complete overhauling of vocational training is a must, and proposed a conservation work program for high school drop-outs. He advocated more funds for educational TV, and improved library services.

Metropolitan problems were the next targets of his attention. Pointing out that 9 out of 10 Californians live in a city, the governor said that when local government fails to meet today's challenge, it is because of too much overlapping government. He urged passage of laws to end haphazard formation of new cities and districts, and to permit joint action on common problems by local units.

He asked that the margin of "yes" votes needed to pass local bond issues be cut from 66% to 60 per cent, and said he would submit a later message on housing.

IN HIS wide-ranging message, the governor indicated he would press for legislative action in many other fields where problems exist.

He will seek legislation to up the state's contribution for local mental health clinics by 50 per cent. He proposes expanding anti-discrimination laws, and setting up a "Human Rights Commission" to administer them.

Another bond issue to go on the 1964 ballot, for the purchase of beach and park land, is recommended. Also proposed is consolidation of the present Economic Development Agency with the World Trade Authority in a new unit to attract industry, find new markets and draw more tourists.

The governor recommends vigilant protection of California's $3 billion agricultural industry to maintain our position as the leading farm state. He proposes easing existing laws relating to state aid for local water projects, and consolidation of existing regional water pollution boards into a single state unit.

LOWER RATES for natural gas, and lower rates of interest on consumer loans and charge accounts, are also recommended goals. So are greater highway safety, revision of criminal law, and a sweeping review of the state constitution with emphasis on improving state and local taxation.

When the governor's proposals are stacked on top of those of individual legislators, the staggering size of the mountain of work ahead of us is only too apparent.

Gordons to Speak To Manuscripters

The Gordons, successful husband and wife team of mystery writers, will be the featured speakers at tomorrow's meeting of the Southwest Manuscripters at 8 p.m. at Clark Stadium in Hermosa Beach.

Their books have sold more than six million copies and have been translated into 13 languages. Their filmed novels include "Operation Terror," starring Lee Remick and Glenn Ford, under the title "Experiment in Terror." Their latest work, "Menace," is an adventure-suspense story, set in Tokyo, Hong Kong, and Bangkok.

Winners of the Manuscripters Christmas Short Story Contest have been announced. They are: Lou Hartnett, first prize; Tom Potts, second, and Polly Booth, third.

NEW OFFICERS who will be installed at the January meeting are: Mark Clifton, president; Florence Hancher, secretary; Miles Walton, treasurer; Beryl Pierce, program chairman; and Dorothea Barger, hospitality chairman.

The group meets on the third Friday evening of each month, presenting a program of writers, prominent in various fields of the craft. A social coffee hour follows, where both selling and beginning writers may meet and discuss their problems.

Information about membership requirements may be obtained by calling the secretary, Florence Hancher at FR 2-2097.
