...Let's Go

By LARRY MACARAY

What a wonderful beach Monte Carlo has. We spent all day lounging on the beach and getting a beautiful suntan. It is not at all like our beaches—full of sand and lifeguards—but full of rocks and waveless water. Anyway, it was very enjoyable and relaxing for our group after so much traveling. We left Monte Carlo without saying goodbye to Princess Grace—and I'm sure she'll get over it—but nevertheless we thought about her when we drove by the palace.

The drive along the French Riviera was very interesting. We hear so much and read so much about how exclusive and fashionable it is—and to be there is a little disappointing, in a way, and exciting in another. It's almost this way everywhere one goes—the reality of a locality bursts some bubbles but also strengthens other feelings about what one has built up.

EVERYWHERE we went, even before we left the United States, people would tell us, "the roads in Spain are terrible." Of course, we really expected the worst! We kept waiting as we began to drive farther into Spain toward Barcelona.

The roads have been good and very little traffic either way. A great deal of road work is being done everywhere in Spain, which means that more tourists should be coming to this country in the future.

Barcelona was a surprise. The busiest city I've ever seen—all hours of the day and night—people swarming everywhere. An old and beautiful seaport that still maintains a contact with the past.

WE HAD a very difficult time making any sort of connection with my artist friends, Ricardo Tradera or Santi Suros.

Ricardo had missed my last letter from the United States informing him of a change in hotels and dates, so I just missed him as he had gone to Madrid the day before my arrival.

I did manage to meet his sister at their summer home outside of Barcelona and also her husband in Barcelona. He is a dentist and it was interesting to observe the workings of a Spanish dental office.

VALENCIA WAS our next stop, but only an overnight one, so we didn't get to see the city. It did look as though it had lots of charm.

Sometimes—or I should say you never can tell how road conditions or traffic conditions will be, so we always leave a little early on our journey from one city to another.

Going from Valencia to Madrid, we were pleasantly surprised by the good roads and lack of cars traveling them, so we arrived at our lunch date too early.

IT WAS THE sleepy little village of Motilla del Palancar, boasting a population of 700 souls. We met some young boys from the village and they wanted to show us their town. As it turned out, it was a rare experience to be escorted around to see the two churches, the main street area, the court house, the doctor's office, the old theater, and the new one being built, the two banks, and other sights by the sons of the judge, the chief of police, their cousins, and friends. Madrid is everything that you read and hear about. The Prado is certainly one of the great museums in the world. The Goyas that we saw yesterday are superb and I hope to see the Goya Museum and Goya's house in Toledo today.

WE HAVE tickets to see a bullfight late this afternoon on our return from Toledo. What's Spain without seeing a bullfight?

We have just turned 3,000 miles on our little bus and it looks as though it will be 4,000 more before we hit our last stop in Paris.
