

FAMED TOWER . . . The famous Leaning Tower of Pisa is shown here, with the Cathedral of Pisa in the background. The tower, which is 14 feet off plumb at the top, is sinking slowly according to experts, and some have gone so far to predict that the tower will topple over in the year 2200. The tower serves as a bell tower today, and has been visited by millions of tourists in the years since it was built.

... Let's Go

By LARRY MACARAY

Note: The following column was received by mail from Paris this week. It should have appeared last week but Larry told us the mails in Paris are slow.

Spain has certainly been a pleasant surprise for all of us on our tour. We expected terrible roads . . . poor food . . . bad water . . . and "flea bag" hotels . . . and instead we found good roads with lots of new road building going on, excellent food, good water, and fine hotels. The Hotel Canciller Ayala in Victoria, Spain, is one of the finest hotels I have ever stayed in anywhere.

I am sending along a photo I took of the leaning tower of Pisa and the famous Cathedral of Pisa. The tower, which is used as a bell tower, is much bigger than I expected and leans more, too. The top is 14 feet off plumb . . . and is gradually sinking. In fact, the math experts predict that somewhere in 2200 it will topple over. We'll see!

Back to Spain and what we did there. Last Sunday, we went on an all day excursion to Toledo, the former capital of Spain. Such an interesting city . . . protected on three sides by a river and almost a natural fortress. So much history of Spain has been made there that the entire city has been made a national monument.

WE HURRIED back to Madrid so that we could attend the bullfights and I had only been to one in Mexico City . . . so we were all very anxious to see them. The Plaza de Toros holds 25,000 people and it was absolutely full. Madrid is certainly the bullfighting capital of the world. The excitement was almost too much to take, but we loved it. The toreadors were thrown by the bulls and were almost gored each time. They carried one off with a bloody head and we figured that he had really experienced his last "moment of truth," but they doused him with water and cleaned him up and it turned out to be the bull's blood. All of us liked the bullfights very much and what luck it was to find out on Monday as we arrived in Victoria, Spain, that a four-day celebration to the White Virgin was just beginning. It is a religious celebration, but what a wild town . . . the main attraction being four days of drinking, dancing, singing, and bullfights. It did not take us long to pay the "scalpers" price for seats on the shady side and off we went again.

A MUCH DIFFERENT atmosphere than at Madrid. A smaller plaza, but the same size bull ring . . . better bulls . . . better toreadors . . . and a real carnival atmosphere. It's almost beyond description to relate the hilarious activity of the crowd. Singing, chanting, cheering, drinking, and really receptive to the entire spectacle. But the funniest of all their antics came after the bullfights were over. Hundreds of fans, wearing baggy blue costumes that resembled circus clowns, poured into the area and danced, cavorted, sang, played toro, etc., until they practically fell from exhaustion. It was a fever pitch demonstration that was almost hypnotic, in that we were compelled to stay and watch . . . most of us with our mouths open.

We are in Paris now and had a full day of sightseeing today. If you have ever been to Paris you must know that all of the buildings are black with dirt of hundreds of years. Well . . . a new law has been passed that all buildings must be cleaned and scrubbed. What a different and more appealing appearance Paris will have now. Noticed today that the Louvre and the Opera House are being scrubbed. Some of us are getting up at 3 a.m. tomorrow to get the famous onion soup at Les Halles, the fruit and vegetable market. Then on to Notre Dame for the early mass, a visit to The Louvre, the Jeu de Paume, the Rodin Museum, and then out to Versailles for the afternoon. Hope we last the day.

Garden Checklist

1. Dutch iris, freesia, ixia, sparaxis and several other spring-blooming bulbs are best planted in September, not later.
2. Avoid top watering with chrysanthemums from now on. Stake them to be sure they don't flop over when heavy with blooms.
3. Many of your favorite perennials—Canterbury bells, English daisies, etc.—will be available as seedlings this month.
4. Give roses plenty of water this month to encourage fall blooms.
5. Feed established lawns in September to keep them vigorous and green well into fall.

"Although the graduate level classes are conducted primarily for Naval, Marine, and Coast Guard officers, each year an increasing number of Air Force and Army officers sign up for courses," said Capt. Harry Frishman, commanding officer.

The instruction is to help keep reserve officers combat ready and assist them in meeting advancement and retirement requirements. Information on the classes and on subjects to be offered can be obtained from the college at GE 9-6015.
