'Land of Pharaohs' $1500 Winner in Fiesta Parade

The "Land of the Pharaohs" sailed Los Angeles Harbor Sunday as winner of the 1963 Fishermen's Fiesta in San Pedro.

A vividly colored pyramid and Egyptian court covered Anthony Mascola's 80-foot purse seiner, the S. G. Guisepe, to capture the $1,500 first prize as most beautifully decorated float in the 39-boat, 14-mile parade.

Second place winner, announced by head judge Dana Andrews, was Frank Iacono's Frankie Boy decorated in the theme "Aloha." Third place was John Guglielmo's Jimmy Boy decorated in the theme "Holland." John Mardesich's North Pacific won fourth prize with "A Day at the Bullfights."

HONORABLE mentions went to Mike Trana's Astronaut, "Oriental Moonglow," Sal Manzella's Two Brothers, "The World We Live In," Sam Randazzo's Endeavor, "Old Crow," and C. F. Lancaster's Little Mike, "Hollandia."

Janet Cvitanich, 19, skipperette of the 1963 Fishermen's Fiesta, signaled the start of the two-hour water pageant by releasing a hatch of 10,000 helium-filled balloons over the waiting fleet.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown, honorary chairman of the fiesta, rode in the parade on the Determined, skippered by Janet's father, John Cvitanich.

Governor Brown, Assemblyman Vincent Thomas, and the consul generals of both Italy and Yugoslavia briefly addressed the assembled crowds before the parade. Master of ceremonies for the dockside events was Nick S. Trani, general chairman of the Fishermen's Fiesta.

THE PARADE culminated three days of fiesta activity, which despite Los Angeles County's record heat wave, drew the largest total crowds in Fishermen's Fiesta history. Following the parade an International Festival featuring folk dancers from six nations was performed in a special dockside show.

Thousands of fiesta visitors boarded special water taxis for harbor cruises, continuing throughout the evening. Other fiesta activities were fishermen skill contests, international food booths, street dancing, carnival rides, and open house aboard two U.S. Navy destroyers.

Judge Cites High Cost of Delinquency

Vincent S. Dalsimer, Los Angeles Superior Court judge, this week told an area group that juvenile delinquency in the United States costs more than $2 billion a year.

Guest speaker at the regular luncheon meeting of the Hawthorne Lions Club, Judge Dalsimer said the costs fall into two major categories of lost property and police and correctional services rendered.

HALF THE nation's crimes, including 60 per cent of the burglaries and half of the robberies, are committed by children under 18 years old, said Judge Dalsimer, who is a member of Governor Brown's Committee on Problems of Children and Youth and is a former Juvenile Court judge.

He called for treatment of pre-delinquents in the schools as one of the most effective ways of preventing juvenile delinquency.

JUDGE DALSIMER, who is a past director of the California Department of Professional and Vocational Standards, is expected to run for Los Angeles County District Attorney.

Dr. Dale Freeberg, president of the State Board of Optometry and Lions Club past president, introduced Judge Dalsimer.

Work Slated On 26 Major City Streets

Allocation of nearly $75,000 for improvements of major city streets in Torrance has been approved by the Board of Supervisors, according to Kenneth Hahn, supervisor in the second district.

The funds cover maintenance and improvement projects on 26 city streets. Major improvements will be made on 190th Street, Carson Street, Redondo Beach Boulevard, Sepulveda Boulevard, Torrance Boulevard, Anza Avenue, and Prairie Avenue.

The money is part of the gas tax revenues allocated to Los Angeles County by the state. Such allocations represent about 42 per cent of the total highway budget in Los Angeles County.
