TV CANDIDS
by Terrence O'Flaherty

If a good meal can affect a critic's review of a show surely "Petticoat Junction" would get the best notices on the air. Last week I was on the set of the new CBS comedy series and stayed to have the best dinner in town.

The set is the "Shady Rest Hotel" where Bea Benederet and her three daughters run a kind of boarding house on a branch line railroad. The table was long and we sat down to a "please pass the bread" kind of meal that I was afraid had disappeared forever.

They had chicken and dumplings—not those big fist-sized dumplings but small thumb-sized ones. The biscuits were hot and homemade and the corn on the cob was as sweet as a starlet's smile. There was milk or cider to drink and the apple pie had a big chunk of real cheese instead of one of those mechanically sliced, transparent, yellow squares with no taste.

The show itself appears Tuesday nights against formidable competition (Richard Boone and "The Greatest Show on Earth") but CBS is counting on attracting a large audience of viewers who are interested in a pleasant, easy-going comedy—free of disease, psychiatry, murder, and the threat of communism.

One need only recall how Tennessee Ernie Ford clobbered "Playhouse 90" to realize that CBS may be right.

Judging from the early episodes the stories will meander rather than race. Like the "Beverly Hillbillies" the underyling premise for laughter is country folks getting the better of city folks. Three veteran character actors are in the permanent cast to be sure the premise works smoothly: Edgar Buchanan as Uncle Joe plus Smiley Burnette and Rufe Davis as retired railroad men who operate the "Hooterville Cannonball."

The weight of the series falls on its star, Bea Benederet. She is as sure and capable as anyone in Hollywood today and it is an absolute delight to see her being given "star treatment" at last. She will be remembered as Gertrude the telephone operator on Jack Benny's radio show and as a regular performer on the Burns and Allen TV show. Last season she was Cousin Pearl on "The Beverly Hillbillies."

Her three gorgeous daughters in the show are played by three gorgeous starlets whose names have slipped my mind. One of them was my dinner partner. Her eyes were like limpid pools. She told me how to make chicken dumplings. And I believed her—until I saw the catering truck pull away from the set after dinner. She didn't do the cooking at all!

That's the way it is in Hollywood. You either get the limpid pools OR the chicken and dumplings—but never both.
