

Back-Yard Cooks Produce New Boom

By REYNOLDS KNIGHT

The season for outdoor cooking, which became a fad in the U.S. a decade ago and produced a boom in charcoal as well as backyard accessories, such as portable grills and lawn furniture, is about to begin anew. But this year there'll be far less blowing on the charcoal to get the fire started. Outdoor cookery is becoming a pushbutton craft.

Among a number of new products for backyard barbecue addicts will be cooking carts that use bottled gas to fire permanent ceramic "coals" to provide the desired broiling conditions in a matter of minutes. Some will feature stainless steel shields to concentrate the heat and a "stepped up" grill arrangement that permits cooking or warming several things at once.

A still more sophisticated line of outdoor cooking equipment is a line of units designed to be mounted on posts in the patio. The posts make it feasible to install a gas line running out from the house—or even a hot water line for convenience in cleaning up or perhaps washing the family car.

As an added feature, some of the new units can be tilted to become outdoor space heaters thus prolonging your enjoyment of evenings out of doors.

SCHOOL ROOM LASER—The first laser specifically designed for teaching was introduced at the National Science

Teachers Association's recent annual convention in Chicago. Laser (Light Amplification By Stimulated Emission of Radiation) technology concentrates energy in a narrow path of light.

The instructional laser, engineered by The Bendix Corp., was donated to 3,500 science teachers at the convention.

Development of a low-powered gas laser at a fraction of the cost of one generated by a ruby has made it feasible for the first time to produce a teaching laser for the educational field, explained G. J. Rosenblit, manager of new products planning for the Cincinnati division of Bendix.

The teaching laser is built with a plastic "window" permitting viewers to see the tube that generates the laser beam and also to watch the helium-neon gas discharge. The beam itself is shown by projection onto a screen.

Another feature of the school-room laser is the use of the beam as a "wire" in voice communication.

The instructional laser, especially designed for demonstrating and teaching the basic properties of lasers, may also be used by teachers and scientists to provide a precise light source for physical optics measurements and in many other laboratory experiments.

PROFIT BEEF—For beef producers hard hit by current low cattle prices a timely hint comes from a leading agricultural services company. The advice: Don't overlook profits that are to be made on dairy steers and other low-quality meat cattle.

Livestock specialists at the Cargill-Nutrena research farm at Elk River, Minn., recently issued a report saying that low prices have made these poorer-quality animals more profitable than high-quality, more expensive beefs. That's because the low-quality specimens gain weight quickly and convert feed more efficiently than their slow-gaining, more-costly-to-feed, high-class fellows.

Cargill - Nutrena suggested these guidelines for feedlot cattle buyers: animals with large bone development usually are fast growers; those with deeper and wider heads usually have more body width and depth, and thus greater bone and muscle development; and, cattle with coarse hair coats also tend to grow faster than those with fine hair.

To Speak to Manuscripters

"Don't Write a Book" will be the speech title of Rosemary de Camp when she guests at the Southwest Manuscripters tomorrow evening at 8 p.m.

The talented Miss de Camp, Mrs. John Shidler in private life, is well-known for her work in films, radio and TV, as well as the writing field.

Facts not so well known are that Miss de Camp has both a BA and MA degree in speech

The Cargill-Nutrena specialists said consumers needn't worry that their suggestions would mean tougher steaks, for there is plenty of top-quality beef available at meat counters over the country.

THINGS TO COME—A convenient safety device for your car is a new roll-away warning sign that can be attached to the underside of the trunk lid. It has luminous red block lettering, said to be visible 1,200 feet away and 600 feet by night, warning "Caution Stalled Vehicle" . . . An electric carpet sweeper, priced under $12, has a brush that moves at 3,500 strokes per minute, will shake loose embedded dirt and pick up fine hairs shed by pets . . . A new exhaust sound control system now available for some popular makes of cars uses a series of small sound chambers only slightly larger than the conventional tail pipe.

FASTER AND FASTER—Answering critics of the trend to ever-higher speeds for new-model cars, the executive of one of the major car makers says we'll always want to go faster simply because "time will always remain the most valuable of resources." In further defense of speed, he said that while people tend to travel about a half-mile per hour faster on the highways each year, studies of accidents point more to factors other than speed in some 85 per cent of highway mishaps.

BITS O' BUSINESS—Manufacturers of fine china and silverware find business booming; credit it to a rising level of popular culture and elegance in living . . . A tremor from the recent Alaska earthquake that will hit the pocket-books of the seafood buffs is higher prices for king crab and salmon.
