Surely one of the most Tillstrom these days. He moved memorable moments on recent to New York a few years ago

The hands belonged to Burr Tillstrom, and heretofore they had been hidden under the heads of Kukla and Ollie, the most famous puppets in TV history.

I found Tillstrom in his apartment on Beekman Place which overlooks part of the East River and almost all of Irving Berlin who lives across the street.

"I'VE NEVER MET him but I keep singing 'God Bless America' and 'There's No Business Like Show Business' every time I walk the dog," said Tillstrom, "So far he hasn't looked out. I'd sing louder but it embarrasses the dog."

"I had originally planned the Berlin Wall skit for a party in honor of Adlai Stevenson," he explained. "It was quite an affair with all the Kennedys, affair with all the Kennedys, Newton Minow and half the Cabinet there. I wondered who was running the store. But it turned out that was the night when Mrs. Kennedy's tour of The White House was televised and we all watched it. I figured that ANOTHER performance after that would have been too much, Besides, it was a tough act to follow!

surely one of the most memorable moments on recent television was a ballet of two hands on the premiere of "That Was The Week That Was." It told of the heartbreak involved in the opening of the Berlin Wall at Christmas time.

The hands belonged to Burr of TV."

His fans are great in num-ber and surely no performer has excited the admiration of so many other artists—perhaps because puppets are not direct-ly competitive! People like Lena Horne, Leonard Bern-stein, Lillian Gish, Tallulah Bankhead and the late Elsa Maxwell are all old and close friends made through Kukla friends made through Kukla and Ollie.

and Ollie.

On the night he did his Berlin Wall number, Tillstrom made a new friend. He showed me this telegram:

Dear Mr. Tillstrom: I have just seen your beautiful hand ballet and I am so touched that I felt I must tell you so right away. Lucille Ball.

THERE ARE many people who fear that Jack Paar is either mellowing into advanced either mellowing into advanced middle-age or is storing up his pettiness for an enormous explosion which will send arms, legs, springs, nuts, bolts, and hairpieces flying. Certainly he has been very orderly lately. All the shenanigans have been carried on behind scenes for a change.

In my estimation his shows

In my estimation his shows have improved greatly in the hour format this season. He seems to have hit his proper stride. I watch him more now because "That Was The Week That Was" directly precedes him on the NBC network.

a snit over the fact that "That Was The Week That Was" is ahead of him. (It's too funny.) Last fall he was stamping his foot because "Harry's Girls" was ahead of him. (It wasn't funny enough.) He threatened to leave NBC. So, the brass at Rockefeller Center panicked and announced it will move "That Was" to Tuesday despite the fact that it seems an absurd day for a week's roundup. ((On July 17 "Parade," a musical series originally seen in Canada, will replace "TW3" and in the fall Jack Benny will move in ahead of Paar.) in ahead of Paar.)
