

...Vaccinations

(Continued from Page 20) received any basic disease protection at all. In a 1962 survey made by the U.S. Census Bureau which involved 35,000 families, it was discovered that some 4 million children under the age of 5 years had not been vaccinated against diphtheria, whooping cough, or tetanus. It is also sobering to learn that 17,000 preventable cases of whooping cough were reported in this country in 1962, even though vaccine against the disease became available in the 1940's.

PROTECTIVE vaccines for diphtheria and tetanus have been available in this country for around 40 and 30 years respectively. Despite this, in 1962 some 444 cases of diphtheria and 256 tetanus deaths were reported. The value of diphtheria toxoid as a disease preventive is well established, and it is equally well known to physicians that the tetanus vaccine is one of the best and most effective of all the vaccines. In World War II, only 4 cases of tetanus were reported among United States soldiers who were fully immunized against the disease and who received a tetanus toxoid booster at the time of injury. When one considers that a slight prick may introduce tetanus organisms into the body, it is a surprising thing that so many persons fail to obtain or maintain an immunity against this highly fatal disease.

The maintenance of artificial immunity against communicable diseases is a lifetime task. But national disease and death records show that a significant number of people lack proper immunization and are subjected to illness, or die unnecessarily, from diseases that have been preventable for many years.

GARDEN CHECKLIST...

1. You can still plant those dahlias and gladiolus bulbs. Check with your local nursery for first quality tubers and corms to insure the biggest, healthiest blooms.
2. Now is the time to look for your favorite tuberous begonia.
3. When picking early rose blooms, don't try for long stems by cutting back too far. Leave as much of the leaf surface as possible for proper plant development.
4. For best results from your spring flowering, deciduous shrubs (i.e. spiraea, philadelphus, weigela and forsythia), prune after they have finished blooming.
5. With the exception of column stocks and asters, pinch out the terminal bud after transplanting annuals from nursery flats. This insures bigger blooms and better branching.
