...Let's Go

By LARRY MACARAY

The Museum of Modern Art in New York City has just opened the new section of expanded galleries—a six-month program that cost slightly over $5,500,000.

What a truly fine museum—the last time I was in it was in 1962 and I found much to my liking there. Truly a Museum of Modern Art—it has consistently bought paintings on the calculation that maybe one in twelve might have some permanent value someday.

Thirty-seven galleries form this maze of a bird's-eye view of art from the last 75 years. Of the museum's 1,800 paintings and sculptures, some 550 are on view, more than double the previous number.

IN 1939, upon the occasion of the opening of the unique museum, Franklin D. Roosevelt called it "a living museum, not a collection of curios and interesting objects."

Almost all of the museums throughout the world are primarily concerned with the past—very little attention is given to the present—operating on the assumption that time will judge the worth of a piece of art—and then if the feeling toward it (or the artist) is favorable, it should have a place within the "sacred walls."

Everything from the latest example of pro-art "blow-ups" of cartoons to the newest plastic chair, to the latest model catcher's mitt finds its way to this museum.

NOT ALL people go to see the paintings and sculptures. Last year over 700,000 people went through the museum and a large number of them were also interested in sipping iced tea in the garden, seeing Garbo in her old movies, and watching other people look at paintings.

Whatever the reason, the museum means many things to many people—and the six months that it was closed proved to a lot of New Yorkers that the old "colossus on 53rd street" was really very important in their lives.

I remember quite well the major show that was on exhibit the last time that I was there—a most contemporary Polish exhibition—very abstract and "way-out"—something surprising for the other side of the iron curtain.

THE WEST probably could not appreciate a museum of modern art—at least not yet. There are still too many people who cringe at the sight of anything slightly non-objective and unfamiliar to their sensitive eyes.

The day will come when Californians will not fear to appreciate modern concepts in art—the "pretty picture" idea can't last forever in everyone's frame of reference when they discuss art—and it seems harder and harder every day to not be, in some way, involved with art.

The increasing attendance at museums, the increased enrollment in college art classes, and a greater awareness of the large part that good design plays in our lives—all this adds up to a more understanding public.

THE BOWERS MUSEUM in Santa Ana is an example of a museum that is gradually going modern. For years it was a stuffy old caretaker of relics. Since Merton Hinshaw took over as director—well, it's been gradually changing toward showing the public what's going on in the world.

Of great interest to me is that there is an exhibition of colleges there now until June 14. Some colleges are very finely done out of colored tissue and others wildly done with strange ideas behind them—all by a good friend of mine—me.

El Camino Announces Fall Dates

Part-time students will register Aug. 19 from 1 to 3 p.m. and from 5:30 to 7 p.m. in the student activities building.

Graduating high school seniors may make appointments for testing, counseling and registration beginning July 1. Students who plan to attend on a full-time basis, 10 units or more, may register during day time hours only.

Persons who have been out of school for more than a year will register Aug. 31 through Sept. 4 in the student activities building.

Reservations must be secured in the registration office beginning July 1. Placement tests, if required, must be completed five school days prior to registration.

The last possible day to register is Sept. 14, the first day of classes.
