'Fifth Disease' Prominent, Not Serious in Area

By K. H. SUTHERLAND, M.D.
Erythema infectiosum is an acute contagious skin disease that is characterized by the sudden appearance of a bright red facial rash. Its occurrence, particularly during the spring and summer months, is more frequent than is often realized. It is not considered at all serious, and the outbreak that recently occurred in a Los Angeles school may have caused some needless concern. No one has ever died of it and complications in the wake of its occurrence are unknown.
Because of the frequency with other rash-producing disorders have been confused with erythema infectiosum, as long ago as 1905 it was given the name of "fifth disease"—measles, scarlet fever, German measles, and Duke's disease or parascarlata (in this particular order) being the first four. The rose rash of infancy (roseola infantum), sometimes called the "sixth disease," may also be similar in appearance to erythema infectiosum.
Erythema infectiosum is usually absent though in some few cases mild illness, including a slight fever and sore throat and loss of appetite, may be experienced. Though the inflamed cheeks are hot to the touch, they are not usually tender or itchy. Within a period of 24 hours after its appearance, the rash spreads across the nose and the eruption assumes a "butterfly" formation. The areas around the mouth, chin, and eyes generally remain clear, though the forehead may become "spotty."
IN THE NEXT two to four days, a diffuse and mottled eruption appears on the outer surfaces of the arms and the front of the legs and usually spreads over the extremities with the exception of the areas back of the knees and the inner forearms. It also extends, in lesser degree, over the neck, chest, and buttocks. The hands and feet may be involved last or not at all.

THOUGH THE "fifth disease" may occur at any age, children between the ages of 3 and 12 are the individuals more frequently affected. The disease rarely occurs in infants or in persons over 40 years of age. Some physicians claim that it shows no partiality for either sex, but twice as many girls as boys were infected in the 1962 epidemic that occurred in one section of Los Angeles County.
Experiments have indicated, though not established, that the causative agent is a virus. It is also presumed that the virus is spread from person to person by droplet infection, that is, by the spray of uncovered coughs and sneezes. More recently, abnormal cells were found in throat smears obtained from persons with conditions suggestive of the disease. It is said that further experience with this technique is necessary to determine the frequency and specificity of these cells.
MOST OFTEN the first sign of the disease is the rash that abruptly appears on the cheeks, and the usual description is that the cheeks look as though they had been vigorously slapped. This occurs in from 6 to 14 days, with an average of 10 days, after infection. Symptoms of illness are usually absent though in some few cases mild illness, including a slight fever and sore throat and loss of appetite, may be experienced. Though the inflamed cheeks are hot to the touch, they are not usually tender or itchy. Within a period of 24 hours after its appearance, the rash spreads across the nose and the eruption assumes a "butterfly" formation. The areas around the mouth, chin, and eyes generally remain clear, though the forehead may become "spotty."
The facial rash fades in from 1 to 4 days but traces of the eruption may persist for several weeks. The eruption on the rest of the body lasts from 10 to 14 days as a rule and fades in the center as it ages, assuming a lace-like pattern. A certain sensitivity may last for some months and the rash will tend to reappear when the skin is exposed to heat, cold, sunlight, or friction. It may also recur in times of emotional stress or when the individual acquires some other infection. After some months, it finally vanishes.

THE CONDITION is so mild that activity need not be curtailed and children are allowed to stay in school. No local treatment is usually advised unless itching develops. Even when illness is present, it is so benign that treatment is not required.
During an epidemic of "fifth disease" or when the case is typical, there is little difficulty in recognizing the disease for what it is. At other times medical attention is advisable, for the rash may, after all, be a symptom of a more serious infection.
