services.

Many in high places stress the need for spiritual nourishment, the necessity to expose ourselves to a higher word and will than that of man-God's Word and will. In our day where God's Word, the Bible, is not known or evident in the business of making a living, the Church with all its failings and weaknesses, a fellowship not of saints but of sinners, does expose us to God's Words and will. Whether this experience results in a lasting imprint upon our lives our responsibility. But there is no such sibility until we do expose ourselves to God's Word and will.

Too many of us who are nominally of the church do not bear the imprint of God's Word and will out in our day by day life where we are living epistles or letters of some kind, too often badly written letters that do not draw others to but detour others from the Church.

Even though many respected persons in high places, including the President of our United States, urge us as families to undergird the Church with our moral support, with our attendance, few of us will be thereby alone persuaded. The mere admonition, "the family that prays to-gether stays together," the family that goes to Church together lives more deeply together, will not be persuasive unless we convince ourselves of the "why" go to Church? Rev. Richard A. Miller It is not one man's opinion but the verdict of history that we need the Church to help us live up to the best we know, to deepen our understanding of what is best, to find more than human help for our deepest needs, to discover that human life only comes to its fulfillment as it loses itself in a higher will and purpose than its own, in a larger service that reaches out beyond self. Finally we need the Church to give us the assurance, the conviction that we are of an eternal destiny, that the life lived here and now in God's presence, under his will as revealed in an actual, historical Person, Jesus Christ and made known through Christ's Body, the Church, is the beginning of life eternal. For unless we live here and now practising God's presence in Christ we cannot expect to hope to live with him eternally. In other words, if we are not here conditioned for fellowship with God how can we expect that to be the hope of heaven in the hereafter?

Why should we go to Church? Because we need the Church, the Church needs us. As parents let us recognize the inconsistency of sending our children to the Sunday Church School, saying it is good for them but not good or necessary for us. It isn't long before children question, "If it is good for me why isn't it good for dad and mother?" The family that goes to Church together grows together in finding and in being found by God in Christ. The home must survive if our civilization is to survive. The home is still the basic unit for our society, for our nation, for our world. As go our homes, so goes our nation, our world. To keep the home going and going in the right direction into the full and abundant life is not an elective, it is required for the future of our civilization. And that must be in the midst of many divisive forces and powers that are at work to disintegrate the home. A religious faith, a loyalty to the highest, to God and Christ can be the preservative, the integrating power for the survival of the home which is endangered by our growing divorce rate and juvenile
