Without air, life stops
... for you and for industry

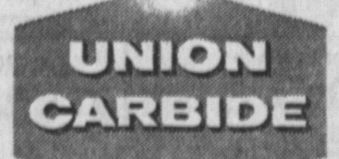

SEEING A CLOUD is probably the nearest we come to 'seeing' air, because air is a mixture of invisible gases. Life-giving oxygen comprises about 21 per cent of the air. We all know how it helps sick people get well, but few of us realize that steel and other major industries could not operate without the same oxygen in tremendous quantities. About 78 per cent of the air is nitrogen. Food processors use it as an atmosphere to protect freshness and flavor of food.

The remaining one per cent of the air is composed of the little-known yet vital "rare" gases — argon, helium, krypton, neon, and xenon. These gases are essential in making incandescent light bulbs, in electric welding processes, and in refining new metals such as titanium.

For fifty years, the people of Union Carbide have been separating the gases of the air and finding new ways in which they can help make a better life for all of us.
