RUDE AWAKENING—Inspecting the work of a thief who was frightened away by a burglary alarm, triggered when the window screen was cut, is Leo Manning, a Torrance fireman, whose house was attacked, and King Willson, inventor of the system.

Rude Awakening for Fireman and Burglar

Torrance fireman Leo Manning's home is truly a castle to him. At least as far as burglars are concerned.

One that tried to enter the house at 5514 Sunnyview St. didn't get very far Wednesday morning.

The reason is that as soon as the thief slashed a rear window screen, a loud bell went off, waking up Manning, who had been asleep.

The noise also frightened the stealthy thief, who dropped the knife he had used to cut the screen, in panic.

Manning is the first home owner who had a realistic test of a new type of window screen burglar alarm put on the market six months ago by Imperial Screen Co. of Gardena.

The fireman, who is away every other night while on duty in the fire department, had been shopping for an effective alarm system for some time for the protection of his wife.

The alarm he installed not only protects doors but the window screens are also wired so that if they are cut or ripped off, the alarm will set off.

The system is self-contained and operates on batteries, so that it even works during a power failure, explained King Willson, president of the company, who invented it.

He explained that the system can even be used to become a fire alarm.
