National Supply Torrance Plant Production Increased

Plans to produce its complete line of drilling rigs at its Torrance, plant were announced by The National Supply Company, manufacturer and distributor of oil field machinery and equipment.

E. G. Unrath, vice president of manufacturing, revealed that the Torrance plant will take over the production of small and medium-sized rigs, now made in the National Supply plant at Toledo, O. The Toledo plant, the company's oldest machinery plant, will be closed permanently after Sept. 30.

The Toledo rigs range from the T-8 Hoist, for drilling in the 1000 to 2000-foot depth range, to the new T-45 Rig, for the 4500 to 7500-foot range. Included is the Type 4-10 Helicopter Rig, designed so that it can be sectionalized into loads weighing 4000 pounds or less for transportation by helicopter. Both the T-45 and the 4-10 were introduced for the first time at the recent International Petroleum Exposition.

Unrath said the size of the Torrance plant will enable the company to easily integrate the new operations. Machinery for manufacturing these rigs will be transferred to the Torrance plant shortly after September 1. No immediate increase in employment is expected.

Traditionally the Torrance plant has made all the company's larger rigs, which now range from the Type 55, for depths from 6000 to 9000 feet, to the Type 1625-DE Rig, for depths from 16,000 to 25,000 feet.

Unrath said that a shift in the markets for oil field products made necessary the closing of the Toledo plant. The company has operated there since the 1890's, when Ohio was one of the principal centers of the nation's drilling and production activity.
