It's A Wise Parent

A Common Sense Approach to Your Child

By Janice Coe

Dear Miss Coe,

I think adults are delinquents, not teenagers! Everyone blames teenagers for not having a sense of responsibility. Well, what responsibility do older people show us? Teenagers aren't taking payola, or telling lies about getting paid or knowing nothing, or selling dope, or making sexy movies, or exploding atom bombs, or threatening to blow up the whole world.

How are we supposed to have any standards or say no to temptations when everything around us is so hopeless?

Angry Young Man

Dear Angry,

Good or you! Stay angry... that's the first step to constructive change. Things aren't hopeless as long as young people like you really care.

Your standards will come from three sources:

First, from your own inner strength, your knowledge and understanding of what is right and wrong.

Second, go out and find others, young, middle aged and old who feel as you do. You will be happily surprised to know how many there are. I'm sure your parents feel as you do, or you probably wouldn't care either. And there are many youth discussion groups in churches, schools and centers wrestling with the same problems.

Third, never stop talking, writing, insisting that our society change its ways: Great revolutions have often come about because one man never gave up the cause, or reform.

Remember Tom Paine. He was ridiculed, hounded, jailed... yet he never gave up. His reward was the final freeing of the colonies and the establishment of the United States!

South Bay Hospital Nears Completion

South Bay Hospital construction was officially 82 percent completed when a 21st progress payment of $87,173 was made recently to two general contractors.

The hospital, a 4-story 150-bed facility, is being constructed on a 12-acre site at Diamond St. and Prospect Ave., Redondo Beach.

Warrants for $87,173 payable jointly to contractors M. J. Brock and Sons Inc. and R. J. Daum Construction Co. makes a total of $1,934,765 paid thus far in construction since April, 1958, when work began.

Altogether, $2,370,200 will go into construction costs of a total of $3.5 million hospital directors expect to spend when South Bay's newest hospital is dedicated in July.

Thomas C. Harwick, clerk of the works who represents hospital district and architect's interests at the construction site, said the construction picture thus far shows completion of all heavy concrete and steel construction work.

He said the 82 percent figure representing an overall estimate of work done — is based on a Jan. 1 date. A month earlier, he said the hospital construction project was 78 percent done.

Construction work, as such, is expected to be finished sometime this June, with June and July, when the dedication is scheduled, to be used for final equipment purchase and installation, staff employment, and numerous last-minute final-phase details and transactions necessary before the hospital can open for business.

School Attack

The most elementary civics student is alive to the fact that the United States is a republic. But trifles will not deter the committee.

Also early in the proceedings, Thirvin D. Fleetwood, vice chairman of the county Democratic Central Committee, addressed the aggregation to point out that these Young Democrats have no sanction by the national, state, or county Democratic groups.

He said his committee and the state body have passed resolutions declaring the party wants no part of this squabble.

Carreiro replied that he wanted no part of the parent agencies.

He also said he is pulling out of the anti-school-system committee and will devote his time to his political progress and that of two candidates he said the Young Democrats will back in the coming City Council election.

Walter Kerubelon, identified as president of Royal Escrow, and James Cicchini, an associate with E. W. Dawson Realty.

Carreiro said the candidates will present valid issues "without regard for the anger of those who find it practical to keep issues out of council races. We are disgusted with candidacies and candidates who cause us to say 'Tweedly Dee, Tweedly Dum' vote for one, and you get the same as the other."

He said the candidates will lend their prestige to the school committee and do "what can be done within the limits of their office." He confessed no present councilman ever has been approached on the subject.

Before the meeting adjourned, one teacher suggested the committee become informed about the school system.

FREEWAY TOUR

County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn will join with Southwest and South Bay civic leaders and public officials next Wednesday morning in an inspection tour of construction work on the world's busiest roadway, the Harbor Freeway, which is now being extended from 124th to 190th St.

Satellite Shoot Weary Affair

(While much has been written about the actual launching of satellites, little space has been devoted to the long hours of waiting and delay that precede the normal satellite or missile shoot, whether it be from Vandenberg or Cape Canaveral. Often days intervene between the announced scheduled firing date and the actual launching day. This writer has personally attended a shoot which required six days before the satellite left the ground. Each day found the newsmen waiting patiently in an open field some two miles from the launching pad. This is the story of such a day, identical with the waiting which has just resulted in the launching of Discoverer IX.—Ed.)

(Special to the Torrance Press) Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif. — Badger-watching occupied newsmen covering the latest attempt to launch a Discoverer satellite.

While newsmen watched the badged, missilemen trained their eyes on the overcast sky. The satellite's launching was one of those "iffy" propositions. If the sky cleared, the satellite might get off the pad and into a south-north polar orbit. If then the Discoverer ejected its nose cone at the proper time and place, Hawaii-based aircraft might snatch it from the sky as it parachuted down. Meanwhile, there was the badger — with no "ifs" or "buts" about it.

Spot the Badger

When the gentry of the press arrived at the observation site, some sharp-sighted newshawk promptly spied the badger. This was commendable because newsmen are supposed to ferret out things. This feat was particularly praiseworthy since the little animal was almost invisible as it huddled in a clump of dusty sagebrush.

Everyone gathered around the badger and stared at it intently. The badger ignored us. Then the badger struggled to its feet. Even a cub reporter could see that the badger was on its last legs.

While we watched the badger, the PA loudspeaker blared. Countdown stood at launch time minus 35 minutes. A few bets were offered that the Discoverer would not go up. A newsmen is dumb like a fox. There were no takers.

Countdown Halted

Ten minutes later, at T-25 (time minus 25 minutes), the Air Force announced a countdown suspension for one hour due to weather.

Cloud-ridden skies to the south and west obscured the 170 degree flight course. Missilemen must visually track these big birds.

At last lunch time was with us. The girl who drives the caterer's truck tried to feed the badger some bread. He wasn't having any. An offer of water also left the badger unmoved.

Another hour's delay rasped over the loudspeaker shortly after lunch. The afternoon wore on. Fortunately for the press corps, the badger provided us with a ready and easy conversation piece. Every glance across the flat dusty plain, to the low ridge with the Discoverer satellite and the ocean beyond, included the sight of a newsmen or an airman standing over the badger.

Badger Badgering

One bored individual began to taunt the badger. "Stop badgering the badger," said the tall colonel in charge of the press party.

The badger did not care for it either. The badger shuffled around in an aimless circle and finally headed for another bush. All the bushes looked remarkably alike but the sick badger knew what it was doing. He crawled beneath the new bush and vanished from casual observation.

Countdown on Again

This was the moment for the PA system to start croaking and sputtering once more. It is T-20 and still counting. Now we ignored the badger and attended to business.

T-15 and still counting.

In spite of many previous performances, the tension mounted. Fifty tons of smooth metal climbing to the cold reaches of space is always an awesome spectacle.

T-12 and still counting.

"On my mark," the colonel said, "there'll be five seconds to go. I'll say 'mark' and then countdown for the last five."

Technical Delay

At T-5 and 30 seconds, the Air Force announced a "technical hold." That means they have stopped the launching process because of some technical difficulty. Hundreds of things can go wrong with one of these complex missile-satellite combinations. One newsmen suggested that someone forgot to bring along a dry match for the fuse.

Suddenly, countdown resumes. Slides down to T-2 and 30 seconds. Another hold. The count resumes again. Seconds tick away. Newsmen chatter away on telephones, alerting newsrooms all over the country.

Seconds Remain

"Mark! Mark!" the colonel shouts.

"Five!"

"Four!"

"Three!"

"Two!"

"One!"

"Zero!"

We brace ourselves against the crushing roar sure to follow a few seconds after firing, as soon as the sound wave crosses the short distance between us and the pad.

We brace ourselves further.

"Zero! Zero!" the colonel shrieks.

Scrubbed!

The satellite fails to respond. The Discoverer is majestic on its launching pad, full of promise, but no delivery today.

"Zero and scrubbed!" the loudspeaker trailed off.

Everyone groaned. It was the thing to do. Anyway, we are all well-practiced in groans of disappointment.

The tall colonel sauntered over to the press table. "How's the badger?" he asked.

Nobody could tell him. With one accord, we got up and stumbled through the sand and grit to the badger's bush.

The badger was dead.

No one was really surprised at that, either. It was just another one of those bad days in missileland.
