Mother Goose Mocks Early English Royalty

Of all the mothers who will be taking bows May 8, none has shown more stamina than the little old lady who has been putting children to sleep for more than 200 years.

But Mother Goose may have had more on her mind than nonsense rhymes. In fact, she may have been taking pot shots at some of the key figures of her day.

"Rock-a-bye baby on the tree top" sounds harmless enough. But the lullaby—popular during the time of James I of England—might have been a joking reference to James' shaky hold on his throne.

World Book Encyclopedia suggests that the little boy who sat in a corner eating his Christmas pie was really an English steward sent to London with a pie for the king.

In the days of Henry VIII, important papers often were baked in pies, and this particular one supposedly contained title deeds for several English estates. The greedy Jack Horner, however, stole the king's "plum"—the deed to an estate that had once belonged to the Church of England.

Humpty Dumpty may have been Richard III. The deformed villain seized the throne of England in 1483 after imprisoning his 12-year-old nephew, the rightful king, in the Tower of London.

Two years later he was killed in the battle of Bosworth Field, and "all the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't put Humpty together again."

All was not "pudding and pie" for George I, whose German background and tastes disturbed his British subjects.

Perhaps they were expressing their resentment—and pointing to his behavior at court—when they chanted:

"Georgy Georgy, pudding and pie, Kissed the girls and made them cry; When the boys came out to play, Georgy Georgy ran away!"

Lecture on India Slated at College

"India: Cobras, Colors, Caves" is the topic to be discussed by Mrs. Laurence deRycke when she speaks at Occidental College Women's Club May 6 at 1:30 p.m. in Freeman reception lounge on the campus.

Mrs. deRycke recently spent two months in India with her husband, a Professor of economics at Occidental College, where he was on a special project for the U.S. Information Service. She also is chairman of public relations for Traveler's Aid Society of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Ernst W. Dorn will give highlights of "The Early Days of Occidental College" and the Occidental College Women's Club.

Mrs. Foster K. Sampson will preside at the business meeting prior to the program.

Ohio and Virginia share the title "Mother of Presidents." Both states have produced eight U.S. presidents. Indiana is known as the "Mother of Vice Presidents."
