Lincoln School Girl Wins Top Prize for Poem

A poet from Lincoln School won first prize for her poetry in the April issue of "The American Girl."

The magazine notified Moira Dwyer, a student in Jane Shelley's seventh-grade class, that she had submitted the best poem of the month. It was entitled "Companionship."

The girl's hobbies run in the creative line—writing and drawing pictures. A good all-round student, she shines in creative-writing exercises in Mrs. Shelley's class.

She has written poetry and short stories in school and at home.

Mrs. Shelley encouraged her to write and to enter her poetry in the magazine's contest. Moira lives with her mother and brother at 3009½ W. 166th St.

Her winning poem:

We sat beneath the live oak
That morning in July;
There were but the two of us—
Loneliness and I,
Together we observed
The dawn's deep-purple sky.

We gather morning glories
Their fragrance makes us sigh;
For we are locked together,
Loneliness and I,
Someday we shall separate
But that is by and by.

We dip our feet in the lily pond
It matters not if we're dry
We imitate the bullfrog's croak
That startled, mellow cry
For now we are together,
Loneliness and I.

Russia School Problems Told

"Much of the real education takes place in the three youth clubs, where outstanding speakers may address various groups," Dr. Trillingham said.

These clubs have important places in each city, frequently occupying an old palace. They have special-interest clubs in subjects such as physics, writing, astronomy, sports, ballet, chess, and some 400 other fields. These clubs hear top experts in various fields.

Russia is a land of great contrasts, he said. In some respects, it is moving ahead quickly, but in others it is backward. For instance, 75% of Russian labor still is engaged in agriculture and still can't produce enough food.

"On the whole, I think our country and Russia are moving closer together in many ways," he said.
