Children Study Indian Lore

Indians are a big topic of discussion these days in Mrs. Mary Ann Hennigan's kindergarten classroom at Anza Elementary School, Torrance. Class activities are centered around an Indian theme, with youngsters learning about four different types of red men—Indians of the Plains, Pueblos, Woodlands, and Northwest Coast. Boys in the class are "braves," while the girls are "squaws" and Mrs. Hennigan is "big chief."

A Tuesday, pow wow will demonstrate what the children have learned, with parents slated to find out that wigwams are made of wood, while teepees are made of skins. They also will find out the scientific reason for the hole in the top of the teepee—the fact that hot air and smoke always rises and has to have somewhere to go. They also will discover how the Indians made fires. The youngsters hear and read stories about Indians and discuss the various phases of America's earliest inhabitants.
