A donkey and an elephant each decided to put on television shows. They chose to put people in them to prove that theirs is not the only specie to bray and tome of the Brave," Frank veloy. Ovies trumpet.

And the people in their productions did not let them down. There was eloquence and emotion in the speeches. There was intelligence and common sense, nervousness and nonsense.

There were promises, too. Promises that no self-respecting jackass or jumbo would ever make. There were representations of truth that can only be defined as half truths. Even a jackal will tell you that a half truth becomes a whole lie when based on supposition.

But the donkey and the elephant did the American people a big favor. They proved that dventures of Robinson Cru-television has ushered in the age of all-encompassing revelation of all-encompassing revelation. The steady stare of the camera lens made it difficult to be too eel Helmet," Gene Evans. nearthly," John Carradine. careless with the truth in front of six million viewers. ark Allbi," Sidney Toler.

The boys in the back room who create the political psuedoimages were a little worried, too. They were aware of the people listening and watching. Quite a bit different than the days when candidates and their backers could fib to little groups stand-ing around in front of a park bandstand or behind the rear platform of a train.

Gone is the sly wink of the back-slappin politico-manipulator. The electronic eye does not wink.

But they were great shows. Even if they only proved that the big-eared donkey wants the ears of the people and the unfor-getful elephant has no desire for human memory to recall in too harsh judgment.

So, it is proper and fitting to offer a vote of thanks now-before the vote of decision for either one in November-to the donkey and the elephant.

They represent the irrevocable and irrefutable truth that two parties in a national system of leadership selection are much better than one.
