I Tel-You

By MIKE GARDNER

This is an account about the happiest press agent in TV. He's the joker who sells all that jive about TV stars you read about in the paper. Well, this one has dumped his "personalities" as the so-called stars are called. He's dropped his clients to rid himself of the harassment, the mental turmoil that obtains when one person has to sell the glamorous image of another person who may be more colorful than a pan of dishwasher. He does not "put down" or condemn his former clients. He knows they're human beings with all the vanities a person acquires when giddy with the heady wine of public adulation. But the press agent is tired of running between two polls of opinion. One is from the star who says: "I'm the greatest. What are you doing to make me greater?" The opposing opinion, from the editorial end, oftentimes may be harshly realistic: "Why should your client's name be in the paper? Why is he such a much?" So, the press agent is going to beat a drum for a more appreciative and uncomplaining clientele. "Personalities" like Huckleberry Hound, Yogi Bear and Jinx, the cat, and Pixie and Dixie. The press agent will even boom boom the name of Boo Boo. Another "client" is the TV coffee bean who wonders if everything is all right. And the bogey—oops—the little Burgie voice. And the rabbit that transferred an idle pile of silver dollars to a model of a coast savings and loan outfit on TV for 10 years. Just think of the residuals! And the press agent knows everybody likes his new clients. The public, the editors, even his former "star" clients. Of course, the press agents colleagues think he's crazy to do publicity for animated creatures, with no pay and no recognition. But the press agent reasons that no pay is worth the little pay received for the mental distress wrought by the antics of real people animated and driven by ambition, conceit, self-importance and delusions of grandeur. Last, but not least, who ever heard of a press agent getting recognition?
