Soil Management

Probably no single facet of home gardening is less understood than proper soil management. Poor soil takes the joy out of gardening in a hurry. You plant a healthy young shrub and watch it go nowhere fast.

The error most commonly made by a novice gardener is to think that he can go on forever growing plants in the same soil. He fails to realize that most growing things reduce the richness of the soil by the amount of nutrients they need to grow.

Then there's the person who, while he knows the need for feeding, neglects the soil's need for humus. Despite added food, the soil produces less and less as it becomes more and more deficient in vegetable matter and therefore compact.

The California Association of Nurserymen tells us that the matter of humus should logically come first. Humus is a leavening agent that opens the soil to receive both food and water; and without it, feeding does little good.

Manures are humus building materials, as are peat moss, leaf mold and sawdust, though the latter should be handled with care since it often robs the soil of nitrogen as it breaks down during decay. Peat and manure and what compost he can make himself are the gardener's best tools for building humus. Work these liberally into garden beds before you start fall feeding.

Fall feeding itself should be done with slow acting fertilizers. Too strong a shot in the arm will induce new growth at a time most plants should be getting ready for a winter nap.

Manures worked in as humus will provide a minor source of food for plants. An added mulch of steer manure over garden beds will add more. Bonemeal is one of the best fertilizers for fall. Worked in before the rains come, it will yield a slow but steady kick over several months.

There are other minor problems that a few simple steps will correct. C.A.N. members are ready with the answers any time you are ready to inquire. Why wait?

LASTS FOREVER

In any clime, if you have your dimension lumber pressure treated with a colorless preservative when being used for wood patios and decks, it will last for the life of the home. Douglas fir is a good patio deck lumber.

UNKNOWN

Wood is as familiar as an old shoe, well known for housing and construction. Yet, it is still so mysterious that persistant chemists have not unlocked the secrets of some of its molecules.
