Planter Ideas

With some ordinary plywood boxes and a roll or two of a decorative covering material, you can easily make your own planter boxes.

Here's the way. First cut a piece of the decorative covering material large enough to cover the bottom and all four sides of the box, plus enough to go over the top, and about one inch down the inside.

Ideal material to use for this purpose is Marvalon adhesive decorative covering for it adheres beautifully to plywood. And you can select it in virtually any color and design you'd like. Orange Ice, the newest color being offered in Marvalon linings, would add a gay note.

When you've cut out the right size piece of material, remove the backing between the sheet and the material and peel apart.

Place the material, adhesive side up, on a flat surface.

Place the box in the center of it. Pull one short side of the material up and smooth it into place with your hands.

Crease along the entire bottom edge of the covering material and cut the extended part of the material on the crease in toward and up to the bottom corner of the box.

Trim off all but one inch from the vertical side flap, then smooth the flap around corner of box.

Repeat this procedure on the opposite end. Then turn box around and repeat on opposite side.

Smooth the two long remaining sides to the box from the bottom to the top.

Now all you have to do is mitre the corners by snipping off excess material with scissors, and smooth covering material into the box.

You can line the inside of the box too if you want a completely professional finish. However, it isn't necessary. Two or three clay pots filled with greens and set in the container will fill it amply. Though Marvalon coverings are moisture-resistant and can be wiped off with a damp cloth, you would be wise to place folded paper towels in the bottom of the planter box to catch excess moisture.

MONTH OF MONTHS

November is the month of months for planting all sorts of plants. It's early to bare-root, deciduous shrubs, but evergreens are ready and waiting to go in the ground. Bulbs, not only the familiar Daffodils and Tulips, but the exotic Lilies should be set out this month. And Bulb covers—selected, annuals that will show color while the bulbs are blooming—can be set out now. Pansies and violas are good choices for this.

ROSE PLANTING TIME

To prepare planting holes for new roses to come next month, work in liberal amounts of steer manure and some leaf mold and some bone meal. Increase the portions of each where ground is poor and where old varieties are coming out to make way for the new.

Introducing roses into your garden for the first time, select a sunny site with enough room to accommodate several bushes. While one rose may be better than none, several are a hundred times better than one.
