Product of Local Firm Used By Egyptians to Save Crops

Giant cargo planes, loaded with emergency shipments of "Sevin" insecticide began the biggest airlift in the history of commercial aviation, this week.

Two million pounds of

"Sevin" insecticide are being airlifted to Egypt to save the cotton crops, according to C. N. Rucker, Manager of Union Carbide Chemicals Company in Torrance. "The insecticide is made in our West Virginia plant and exported by Union Carbide International Company," he stated. The plant-chewing worm pests threaten to wipe out Egyptian crops by devouring any fields that happen to be in their path.

Union Carbide said orders of "Sevin" planned by Egypt could run the air shipments as high as five million pounds.

The first KLM Royal Dutch Airlines freighter, a four-engine Lockheed Super Constellation, carried nearly 34,000 pounds of "Sevin" packed as a powder, in 570 barrels. It will be mixed into a spray for use in Egypt. It is expected to quell the armyworm infestation and to control other cotton pests that are ravaging farmer's fields.

PURCHASE

Purchase of "Sevin" from Union Carbide by the Egyptian government is an encouraging example of cooperation between the Middle East and the United States in the areas of agricultural science and business. Union Carbide acted within 24 hours after hearing from Egypt, and began moving material to the airlift shipping point at Idlewild.

The march of the armyworms across Egyptian cropland is reminiscent of the locust plagues which have harassed the Middle East since biblical times. Large areas of farmlands are literally "crawling" with the worm pests.

An earlier exchange of information between U.S. and Egyptian agricultural researchers developed interest in new "Sevin" insecticide. This compound has been applied in cotton-growing regions of America during the past two years. This spring, the U.S. Government and Union Carbide sponsored exhibits at the mammoth International Agricultural Exposition at Cairo. Interest was heightened in the use of the new compound to help protect Egyptian crops from insect attack.

SEFFEIN

Known as "Seffein" in Egypt, the insecticide will be used extensively to control insects on cotton, maize, barism, and other crops. As a carbamate, it marks the beginning of a new chemical family in the insecticide field. It is safer than commonly-used insecticides now on the market—the chlorinated hydrocarbons such as DDT and the phosphate materials.

"Sevin" is lower in toxicity to humans and warm-blooded animals than are most insecticides, but it is extremely effective in controlling a wide range of insects on many crops. The safety of "Sevin" is important in Egypt because most pesticides usually are applied by hand-operated sprayers. Masks or protective clothing are rarely worn.

As the facts about new insecticides became known, Egyptian officials at the Cairo Trade Fair expressed great interest in "Sevin" to the U.S. Department of Commerce, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and to the manufacturer, Union Carbide Corporation. When armyworms hit Egyptian cotton, the emergency order was placed by the Egyptian government to airlift "Sevin" to Cairo.

During the armyworm plague, "Sevin" insecticide will be applied by both air and ground equipment.
