"Quality First" Is Grant Theme

"Sure we drive for low prices... but never at the sacrifice of sound quality." Thus does J. Luther Knies, W. T. Grant Company Director and Merchandise Vice-President, define the Company slogan "Known for Values."

He lists quality, workmanship, style as the foremost consideration in the buying or building of lines of merchandise for Grant counters. The Company is always striving to incorporate the best possible materials and workmanship in every single item on the market, and at prices that add up to real savings for Grant customers. "As buyers for the public, we pass along to our customers the savings effected by our Buyers' know-how and the opportunity for most advantageous buying made possible by our three giant regional warehouses," the merchandise director continued.

He pointed out the many steps taken by the Grant Company to insure strict adherence to this policy. First a staff of 68 buyers, each an expert in a particular type of merchandise, devotes full attention to market trends and developments to see that Grant customers get the newest, proven-performance fabrics and constructions. And the makers' claims are not sufficient either, he pointed out.

Tough laboratory tests of articles, simulating conditions of use or wear prove its worthiness before the buyer will commit the company to a purchase order. In many instances the buyers specify the standards of quality desired in the making of an item, to give it more durability and longer service. This is one of the reasons for the ever-growing popularity of Grants' own brand merchandise. Customers know they can depend upon its quality and performance, purchase after purchase.

Mr. Knies pointed out that the company's ability to build high quality in Grant's own brand merchandise has won it many honors. He told of a major city where the local newspaper conducted a brand-acceptance survey on women's hosiery. Grants' own "ISIS" brand nylons proved to be the best known brand despite the national advertising of other brands. "Because we know our merchandise is good, we can afford to offer you our famous guarantee of satisfaction or your money cheerfully refunded," Knies concluded.
