

Name Assistant Manager At Torrance Bank Branch

Promotions for two men have brought a new assistant manager to Bank of America's Torrance branch, 1255 Sartori Ave.

Robert H. Sherrett, who has held the post for the past two years, has been elected assistant vice president and assigned to the loan supervision department at the bank's Los Angeles Headquarters.

Succeeding him as assistant manager at Torrance is M. Gale Gardner.

Sherrett is known locally for both his banking and civic work. He is secretary of the Torrance Rotary Club and active in the Harbor Area Community Chest.

He joined the bank as a messenger in 1936 but his career was interrupted for service in the Coast Guard during World War II. He then entered private business until returning to the bank in 1952. A year later, he was named to officer status.

Gardner has been with the bank for almost 25 years, spending the past 14 at the Wilshire branch in Los Angeles. His most recent assignment there was as general lending officer and head of the real estate section.

A native of St. Louis, he grew up in Los Angeles, attending Fairfax High School and the American Institute of Banking. He was a corporal in the Signal Corps during World War II.

Gardner has been active in PTA, Boy Scouts, and Community Chest work.

Sherrett was born in Los Angeles and graduated from Lawndale's Leuzinger High School. He furthered his professional training at the American Institute of Banking.

Trichinosis Can Infect Innocently

Trichinosis or trichina infection is one of the oldest afflictions of mankind, and the occurrence of the disease in the United States is not uncommon. While no more than 32 cases of trichina infection (resulting in two deaths) were reported to California State Department of Public Health from 1956 through 1960, most of the cases that occur are never brought to the attention of health authorities.

Trichina infection in human beings usually comes from eating the meat of hogs that are infested with the tiny worm called Trichina spiralis or trichinae. Other animals including foxes, rats, and bears may also be infected, as indeed may cats and dogs.

However, these animals are not sources of infection as far as man is concerned, although cases of the disease have been reported following the eating of bear meat.

Parasites Grow After trichinosis meat is eaten, the digestive juices free the parasites from the capsules or cysts that surround them, and they then grow and multiply rapidly in the intestinal tract. The adult worms are expelled from the intestines, but the larvae or infant worms pass through the intestinal wall and work their way into the muscles and organs of the body.

Eventually the infant worms encyst in various muscle fibres and stay there for the rest of the person's life. The larvae can live many years in these cysts or capsules, remaining inactive until favorable conditions are produced allowing them to grow.

Some, of course, are eventually destroyed by the calcification process, or die. There is no medication yet known that will kill them.

The severity of the symptoms caused by the parasite disease varies with the number of trichinae ingested and the physical condition of the individual at the time of infection.

The infection may be so light that it is unnoticed; as a matter of fact, it is estimated that one out of every six persons will harbor trichinae in their bodies at some period during their lifetime, although few will ever be aware of it.

Eyelids Swell When infestation is severe, there may be a sudden swelling of the upper eyelids about 11 days after eating the infected meat, and this is sometimes followed by retinal hemorrhage.

The individual may suffer from nausea, vomiting and diarrhea. Swelling may occur in other parts of the body as well as the face, while muscular soreness and pain, difficult breathing, fever, chills, weakness, and prostration may also be experienced. The variety of symptoms makes diagnosis difficult.

As a preventive measure, federal inspection of all pork was once attempted, but this proved impractical, costly, and gave a false sense of security since only random samples of meat could be tested.

As uncooked commercial garbage is the usual source of hog infection, all states but one have passed laws prohibiting the feeding the uncooked garbage to hogs, and such a law has been in force in California since 1956. In those states where hogs are grain-fed the infection is rare, although, to be sure, there is always the possibility that the hog will eat an infected rat or mouse.

Be that as it may, the fact remains that approximately 60 million hogs are slaughtered annually in the United States, and it is estimated that 1 1/2 per cent of these are infected with trichinae.

Prevention The best way to prevent trichinosis is to cook all fresh pork products slowly and thoroughly. Chops and roasts should be cooked until the meat has a grey or whitish appearance as this indicates it is safe to eat, and the use of a meat thermometer is always recommended in the preparation of pork roasts. Pink pork should never be consumed.

Before commercially prepared pork products such as lunch meats, sausage, salami, tenderized hams and the like are sold, they must be treated to kill trichinae. Moreover, all such meats are inspected by government officials and should bear the stamp "Federally Inspected and Passed."

When prepared at home, these products are not usually processed in such a way as to kill the trichinae, and most epidemics of trichinosis are traced to such sources.

The proper cooking of all fresh pork products and the avoidance of others not officially stamped is a relatively simple way to avoid trichinosis. When known infection does occur, the individual should be kept under medical supervision.

A pamphlet giving additional information on trichinosis will be mailed to anyone who sends a card of request to the Division of Public Health Education, Los Angeles County Health Department, 241 North Figueroa St., Los Angeles 12.

Earth Motions Display Shown At Observatory

The six motions of the earth which keep it tumbling in space are illustrated and explained during presentations of "Motions of the Earth," the spectacular that launched its five-week run at Griffith Park Observatory's planetarium theater, Sept. 12, it was reported yesterday by the Los Angeles City Recreation and Park Department.

In addition to demonstrating the two most commonly-known motions of the earth—its rotation on its axis and its annual revolution around the sun—the current spectacular also spotlights the movements of the earth and the moon around each other; the conical motion our planet makes, which is similar to that of a spinning top; the spiral path the earth takes with respect to the sun and the rotation of the galaxy, according to Dr. Clarence H. Clemminshaw, Observatory director.

Through the use of the Zeiss planetarium machine and supplemental projectors, Clemminshaw stated, thousands of years of time are telescoped into a few minutes as the phenomena are projected onto the municipal facility's 75-foot domed ceiling and motions thus become clearly visible.
