HOME HINTS "ENCUMBRANCES"

Generally speaking, an encumbrance is anything which affects the title of real property, whether it is important or relatively unimportant; the encumbrances most familiar to the average home-owner are mortgages, trust deeds, taxes and liens.

Another type of encumbrance is an easement (or servitude) which gives the right to use another's land for a particular purpose. For example, a lot owner may give a gas company an easement to run a pipeline across the rear of the lot.

Restrictions are encumbrances imposed upon the use of land by governmental regulation (zoning, etc.), by private contract (deeds) or by both. Deed restrictions cover such things as set-back, type of dwelling, keeping animals, etc. They are either intended to create a certain type of neighborhood, or to satisfy the desire of the grantor, providing they are exercised in a manner not forbidden by law.

Restrictions against sale of property to anyone because of race, color or religion have been ruled unconstitutional by the courts. While these restrictions may still be imposed, they are unenforceable in any court action.

Another restriction, since changed, forbids certain foreign persons (mainly Asiatic) from owning real estate on the grounds they were not eligible for citizenship. The Supreme Court has ruled this law unconstitutional and eligibility for citizenship is no longer a requirement for owning real estate.
