Bad News for Flagpole Sitters

What will they dream up next?

City recreation commissioners won tentative approval last night of a plan to replace present flag poles with a collapsible model — one designed to save wear and tear on halyards.

Harry Van Bellehem, director of recreation, said the present halyards often require replacement twice a week. The new poles, he said, would eliminate that problem. Councilmen okayed a test installation, indicating they would approve further use if the pole proved effective. It was designed by James Witmer, the city's traffic and lighting engineer.
