Mr. Lincoln's Finest Day . . .

(Second of a series of four)

Just for a moment, let's consider the magnitude of that task which Mr. Lincoln said was greater than Washington's:

First, he is a minority President, polling only 40 percent of the total vote.

Second, Mr. Lincoln did not even carry his own home county.

Third, Mr. Lincoln carried his own home town of Springfield by only 69 votes.

Fourth, 2,800,000 people voted against Mr. Lincoln, almost a million more than voted for him.

MEN ARE DRILLING
Fifth, an armed body of men are reported drilling in Virginia to attack Washington and to prevent Mr. Lincoln's inauguration.

Sixth, General Winfield Scott is summoning troops to Washington to put Mr. Lincoln in office by the point of a bayonet, if necessary.

Seventh, rumors of plans to assassinate Mr. Lincoln are flying like wildfire, and he will travel the final leg of his journey by stealth, in the dark of night, to escape a reported attempt to assassinate him.

Eighth, six States have seceded from the Union, and the seventh is soon to go, only because Mr. Lincoln is elected President.

Ninth, a government in rebellion is established with a President, a Congress, and a Constitution.

Tenth, many people in the North are insisting that Mr. Lincoln recognize the Confederate States, and make the best of a bad situation.

THE DOUBTERS
Eleventh, others insist that Mr. Lincoln surrender the principles upon which he has stood for six years, and bring the seceded States back into the Union on their own terms.

Twelfth, few people believe Mr. Lincoln equal to the task which lies before him.

For instance, a newspaper in Detroit says: "It is lamentable that the President carries to Washington a mind so narrow that it cannot grasp one of the most obvious theories of the government which he goes to administer."

Mr. Lincoln's task was a grievous one indeed. With his situation strongly in mind, let's pick up Mr. Lincoln again in Philadelphia, on Feb. 22, 1861: Mr. Lincoln's Finest Day.

Mr. Lincoln leaves the Continental Hotel about six thirty in the morning. His carriage is escorted by the Scott Legion down Chestnut Street to Independence Hall.

DAY IS BRIGHT
The day dawns bright, and a cannon greets the promise of the sun with a national salute of 34 guns. The weather is cool and bracing. Crowds of people can be seen streaming from all parts of the city toward Independence Hall.

Mr. Lincoln, showing the strain from his 11-day trip across the eastern part of the North from Illinois, enters Independence Hall as thousands of eyes are upon him.

The President - elect is greeted by Theodore Cuyler, president of the Select Council of Philadelphia. "Mr. Lincoln," says Mr. Cuyler, "the task of restoring peace to our distracted country is in your hands."

"Mr. Cuyler, I am filled with deep emotion at finding myself standing here in the place where collected together the wisdom, the patriotism, the devotion to principle, from which sprang the institutions under which we live," Mr. Lincoln replies, pausing as his eyes range over the Hall.

"You have kindly suggested to me that in my hands is the task of restoring peace to our distracted country," he continues.

FROM THIS HALL
"I can say in return, sir, that all the political sentiments I entertain have been drawn, so far as I have been able to draw them, from the sentiments which originated, and were given to the world, from this Hall in which we stand."

"I never have had a feeling politically that did not spring from the sentiments embodied in the Declaration of Independence. I have often pondered over the dangers which were incurred by the men who assembled here and adopted that Declaration of Independence."

"I have pondered over the toils that were endured by the officers and soldiers of the army who achieved that independence," Mr. Lincoln says, thoughtfully.

"I have often inquired of myself, what great principle or idea it was that kept this country so long together," Mr. Lincoln pauses for a second, and as he continues, his voice rises.

"It was not the mere matter of separation of the Colonies from the Mother Land, but something in that Declaration of Independence giving liberty, not alone to the people of this country but hope to the world for all future time." Again, he pauses.

"It was that which gave promise that in due time the weights should be lifted from the shoulders of all men, and that all should have an equal chance," says Mr. Lincoln.

HIS VOICE SOFTENS
"This is the sentiment embodied in the Declaration of Independence," he says, and as he speaks the next words, Mr. Lincoln's voice softens. "Now, my friends, can this country be saved upon that principle?" he asks, gently. "If it can, I will consider myself one of the happiest men in the world if I can help to save it," he says, and his voice drops almost to a hush.

"If it can't be saved upon that principle, it will be truly awful." The last word is almost a moan.

"But," he says, and Mr. Lincoln's voice rises again. "If this country cannot be saved without giving up that principle, I was about to say I would rather be assassinated upon this spot than to surrender it."

"Now," and Mr. Lincoln pauses again, "in my view of the present state of affairs, there is no need for bloodshed and war. There is no necessity for it. I am not in favor of such a course, and I may say in advance, there will be no blood shed unless it be forced upon the government."

"The government will not use force unless force is used against it," says Mr. Lincoln, emphatically.

PLEDGES HIS FAITH
"My friends," he continues, his voice becoming softer, as though he is speaking in confidence, "this is a wholly unprepared speech. I did not expect to be called upon to say a word when I came here. I supposed I was merely to do something toward raising a flag. I may, therefore, have said something indiscreet, but I am willing to live by and, in the pleasure of Almighty God, die by."

THE "12TH STATE"
The April 1, 1960, census discloses that Torrance and the South Coast area combined have a larger population than the states of South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Hawaii, North Dakota, New Hampshire, Delaware, Vermont, Wyoming, Nevada, and Alaska.
