

Thoughts for Lent . . .

FAITH OF OUR FATHERS

By JOHN JAY
April 23, 1811

There is an anecdote which seems to refer to me. If it does, it is proper for me to observe that that head is not entirely accurate.

While in France, I was neither present at the death or at the funeral of any French philosopher. During my residence there, I do not recollect to have had more than two conversations with atheists about their tenets.

I was at a large party, of which were several of that description (atheists).

They spoke freely and contemptuously of religion. I took no part in the conversation.

In the course of it, one of them asked me if I believed in Christ. I answered that I did and that I thanked God that I did.

Nothing further passed between me and them or any of them on that subject.

Some time afterward, one of my family being dangerously ill, I was advised to send for an English physician who had resided for many years at Paris.

He was said to be very skillful, but, it was added, he is an atheist.

I sent for him, and had reason to think very highly of his skill.

For several weeks the patient required numerous visits, so that I saw the doctor often. He was a sedate, decent man.

I frequently observed him drawing the conversation toward religion, and I constantly gave it another direction. He, nevertheless, during one of his visits, very abruptly remarked that there was no God, and he hoped the time would come when there would be no religion in the world.

I very concisely remarked that if there was no God, there could be no moral obligations, and I did not see how society could subsist without them.

NEWLY SEEDED LAWNS

Newly seeded lawns should be kept constantly moist, but don't flood them and wash out ungerminated seed.

ADVICE

One gives nothing so liberally as advice.
