

Why General Telephone Refuses to Arbitrate through a Third Party

At the final meeting before the strike was called by the labor union which represents this Company's employees, the union proposed that issues which were not agreed upon be submitted to arbitration.

General Telephone Company cannot in good faith accept such a proposal. To substitute arbitration for trained, experienced business judgment would not be to the best interest of our customers, our employees and our shareowners. We cannot surrender our obligation to a third party who would not be responsible for the Company's costs, employment opportunities and operations.

We are convinced that there can be no compromise with what is right and what will be, in the long run, to the best interests of our customers who inevitably would pay for any resulting increases in the cost of providing telephone service.
