Catalina Quail Hunting at Its Best in December

Catalina's quail hunting program has been so successful, according to Game Manager Fred Kindel, that last year's hunters booked three quarters of this November's hunting availability before the season opened. However, a number of dates still are available before the season ends Dec. 31, and Kindel points out that Catalina hunting is every bit as good on the last day of the season as it is on the first day.

Practically all Catalina quail hunters took their daily bag limit throughout last December," Kindel reports "and the outlook is for a repeat of that performance this season. The quail are here by the thousands, just as they were last year. In fact, they're even more numerous. And last year, the quail were still coveys from 200 to 500 birds when the season ended.

There are several reasons why Catalina quail stay in such large coveys, Kindel explains. In the first place, there are many more quail of the square mile in Catalina than there are on the mainland, so when the birds form coveys, the coveys in Catalina are much larger than those on the mainland. Soon after the season opens on the mainland, hunters are so numerous that they reduce the number of birds in a covey until it appears the birds have scattered. In Catalina, however, the hunting is controlled and there are so few hunters in relation to the great number of birds that even though they take the bag limit day after day, the kill isn't even noticeable.

There's a lot more to Catalina hunting, however, than shooting a daily limit of quail. The whole experience of a Catalina hunt is satisfying and rewarding in every way, because it's a unique kind of hunting. Towering mountains and views of the Pacific Ocean make this land of rugged, unspoiled beauty seem like a world apart—even though you're only 22 miles from the mainland.

Accommodation for hunters in Catalina include the Harbor View Inn at Two Harbors at the Isthmus, which is a luxury hunting lodge and everything here is planned for the hunter's comfort, convenience and enjoyment. The lodge provides a warm and friendly atmosphere for after-the-hunt relaxation. Meals at the lodge are served family-style to satisfy man-size appetites.

CATALINA QUAIL are on the local island by the thousands this year, ready to give hunters a taste of a unique kind of hunting. There are reported to be more quail per square mile on Catalina than there are on the mainland due to the controlled hunting and relatively few hunters in relation to the birds. The hunting season for the Catalina quail ends Dec. 31.

Red Wings Drop Hockey Match, 12-0

With the lights dimmed in the Olympic Ice Arena and with both teams lined up at attention on the ice, the playing of the national anthem for the first time as part of opening ceremonies was very effective and impressive.

The Red Wings of the Olympic Minor Hockey Association (OMHA) tangled with the Norwalk Pee Wees Friday night, Nov. 15, in the first part of a double header and discovered the hard way that what goes up must come down.

After their win last week over the more evenly matched Can Nuys Hawks, they came up against the more experienced and hard playing Norwalk Drillers who took them to the oil fields and drilled 'em down, 12 to 0. There were 11 icemen for each team in a game that was rough and loaded with spills.

When Minor Hockey Association games are scheduled, they are set up by age division not by ability of the players and often teams find themselves outclassed before the game starts. Most of these seven to 10-year-old Olympic Red Wings are playing their first season and never held a hockey stick in their hands until two months ago.

A lively battle between the Olympic Maple Leafs and the Pasadena Juveniles filled the second half of the double bill. From the face-off, these teams were giving the spectators something for their money. Antagonisms from the past flared up from the start, making this one of the hottest tempered exhibitions yet. Jim Burnett and Doug Middleton, referees for both games, had their hands full keeping these boys apart. The game was well into the second period before Sonny Scanlon scored the one and only goal for the Maple Leafs. Pasadena skated off with an 8 to 1
