

Law In Action

You own your land above and below the earth's surface. At common law it included that part of space "up to the heavens" and under the surface to the earth's center, from "heaven to hell." You clearly had mineral rights and other things underground.

Your ownership includes that usable part directly above your land.

But how far up do you own? Airplanes may fly high above your land and not legally trespass upon it.

RECENT INCIDENTS point up the world's lack of space law. How far up do governments own space? When does one invade another's territory overhead? What rights do a government have to halt overhead flights? How far does this power extend?

Lawyers have been busy recently to insure peaceful use of outer space, even though each nation has a right to defend itself or to advance its own national interests peacefully.

THE FACT IS, there is almost no "space law" and only a little applicable theory from "natural" law. Even with space treaties, how does one enforce them?

Governments are the main space "invaders." If it is hard for you to sue your own government for flying over your property, how much harder if the invader is a foreign government!

IN THE PAST, newly found lands were "res nullius," open to any nation's use and capture.

Does this rivalry apply likewise to outer space? No one knows for certain. There have been no treaties or court decisions to guide nations. Many suggest international control of outer space. Yet nations in outer space competition have not given up their national sovereignty overhead. Nor has any nation offered a plan to govern outer space.

Note: California lawyers offer this column so you may know about our laws.
