Law in Action

Why do people commit crimes? Nobody can tell in all cases. Sometimes because they are sick or have a mental disorder. For a person to be legally insane, he must not know the difference between right and wrong. Under the law a person in such a state of mind cannot form the intention to commit a crime.

In California persons who are unconscious of their acts cannot commit crimes. Idiots and children who are unable to reason are also excused.

AN UNCONSCIOUS person lacks the 'mens rea,' a Latin word meaning a guilty mind. He cannot be blamed. Sleepwalkers may not know the nature of their acts. Though sane when conscious, they are not to blame for their acts when asleep.

Under the law, all people are presumed to be conscious of what they are doing unless they can prove otherwise.

One cannot prove insanity as a defense as well as unconsciousness. For a defense based on unconsciousness presumes that when conscious one has a sound mind. A sleepwalker or a person suffering a fever or drug delirium may have an excuse for his criminal actions.

BUT TO BE a good defense in court one's unconsciousness has to be involuntary. It cannot result from one's own drunkenness, addiction, or own lack of care. If one could prevent his own unconsciousness, the law cannot excuse him from his crime.

Still a person under the influence of alcohol or a drug might show some lack of evil intentions, which might mitigate, but not excuse the offense. But sometimes drunkenness as in driving makes the crime and therefore the punishment more serious than it would otherwise.
