Your Right to Know is the Key to All Your Liberties

Press-Herald

GLENN W. PFEIL Publisher

REID L. BUNDY - Managing Editor

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1964

Welcome Home, Champs

For the first time in its history, Torrance can boast of a national baseball championship.

Congratulations are extended to a group of Torrance-Gardena youths, the Tordena Bullets, who have outlasted more than 1,200 other teams in winning the national Connie Mack baseball title.

The Bullets, under the tutelage of Bob Prior, arrived home Monday following a nerve-shattering week of competition in the Connie Mack World Series in Springfield, Ill.

It is truly a monumental achievement for a team of 16-18-year-olds. In the past, other Torrance ath-letes have proven to be of national championship caliber.

Now another name must be added to the list that includes such athletic greats as Louis Zamperini and Parnelli Jones-the Tordena Bullets, national Connie Mack champions.

The Curiosity Seekers

Curiosity is a universal human characteristic. It often brings great numbers of people together to witness events that range from presidential appearances to death.

About 10 days ago, two men died in a small light plane which crashed into the Riviera section of Torrance-a crash which narrowly missed a heavily populated area. Curiosity, the natural desire to see what had happened, brought hundreds of people streaming into the area.

All too often, crowds at such scenes as that which awaited firemen, policemen, and reporters on Calle Mayor are unrestrained and interfere with the work of those men who must extinguish fires, give aid to the injured, or proceed about the work of cleaning up at such a disaster as that plane crash. This crowd was orderly, for the most part, but it did interfere with the work of firemen.

Fire Chief J. J. Benner, who is responsible at such a scene, told the Press-Herald that his men had to force their way into the area of the crash to extinguish the fire. Several bystanders were sprayed with water, and some were pushed out of the way. Brenner also said the congestion caused by cars moving toward the scene forced his fire marshal to park some six blocks away and walk to the crash site.

In addition to this interference at the scene, the crowd presented a curious and bewildering picture of some of man's less desirious traits. The atmosphere was much like that you might expect to find at holiday picnic-mothers holding small children high into the air to view the scene, teenagers standing on on block walls in the area to get a better look, even grown men dashing about to get closer to the crash

Cars flowed into the area from all parts of Torrance, just to see where two men had died. Traffic was backed up on Calle Mayor for several blocks at one time, and drivers who became impatient with the slow movement only added to the confusion with their quick and foolish movements.

People have been advised many times to stay away from the scene of plane crashes, automobile accidents, and large fires. But judging from this latest occurrence, the advice has fallen largely on deaf ears.

There is an old cliche-curiosity killed the cat. Beware, lest you be the cat.

Debate Over Press Corps Continues at Full Pace

and tempers heat up on the Palo Alto Times. political front, the controversy over press and broad- long as they remain report-east reporters' coverage of ers," said Bodi. "But they

As the tempo picks up ander Bodi, editor of the sional skill is, then, to use nd tempers heat up on the Palo Alto Times. his subjective talents to pro-duce an objective report. The good ones succeed, the bad ones don't." Another editor asserted that newsmen should con-stantly re-evaluate their stantly work to assure that they are

Could I Borrow Your Accountants ?

WASHINGTON REPORT

Sight of Capitol Dome Still a Thrill for Him

(Congressman Frank that what transpires under that dome concerns (if not J. Becker, Republican from New York's Fifth of this great country of ours Congressional District, and the security of the Free is a frequent Torrance World. Indeed, if the envisitor and contributor slaved countries of the to the editorial columns world are ever to be free again, it will have to be of the Press-Herald.) through our efforts. This is By FRANK J. BECKER a grave responsibility, and During the summer months, it is almost impos-I have never carried this burden lightly. sible to estimate the number

$2.000 ☆☆☆ Time is running swiftly of visitors to the Nation's Capitol. Streams of people by, and I will soon be saying farewell to Washington-but stroll around Capitol Hill with each day I realize more and more that I shall never be free of the responsibility throughout the day and on into the evening. I never tire of watching these peo-I assumed here 12 years ago ple as I walk back and forth Every morning and evebetween the House Office Building and the House Chamber in the Capitol. Har-dly a day goes by when peo-ple do not stop me and ask questions about the build-inge and what is going on ning in my early years here, I took a certain route driv-ing between the Capitol and our apartment. Then one morning I changed this route and drove along in ings-and what is going on. front of the Capitol Build-ing. I stopped the car and paused to look up at the Capitol and the Statue of In a few months I will be returing from this life in Washington, and will per-haps begin to see things dif-ferently. When I first came to Washington as a Member of the House 12 years ago, I was treendously impress-Freedom that tops its dome. Since that first morning, I have made it a practice, morning and evening, to drive this route. Most eve-nings I do not get away from of the House 12 years ago, a was tremendously impress-ed. The Capitol dome meant a great deal to me and to the world. It has become even more evident to me today, work until seven or eight o'clock. Sometimes we are in session late and the lights are turned on. (The Capitol is not the White House). It is more of a "Washington it a most impressive sight. Story" than a The Armed Forces Bands Report."

play in front of the Capitol on most summer evenings, determines) both the future and it is thrilling to see the Capitol steps crowded with tourists enjoying the beautiful music.

> This leads me to wonder why all citizens, who are able to do so, do not make it a project to bring their families to this great seat of our government. I have a feeling you would be very impressed and would leave Washington with a greater feeling of respect for, and responsibility to your government. No one realizes more than I that government has its faults, that there is too much corruption, and too great a bureaucracy—but only the PEOPLE, through their un-PEOPLE, through their un-derstanding and participa-tion, can correct these faults. When I look at the Capitol dome, I think to myself, "how much greater our country would be IF—all of our people would pay less attention to columnists and commentators, read more of the news for themselves. the news for themselves, write to their Representa-tives to send them information, attend political meet-ings, ask questions, and in-sist on straightforward answers . . ." Think about this. Later I will try to com-

AFTER HOURS by John Morley New Mythologists Use A 'Political Quackery'

In medicine we call them quacks, which means either practicing without medical authority, or perverting the good name of medicine in il-legal practices.

There are too many politicians and other persons who practice a kind of "so-cial quackery." Some are sincere but misguided, who envision a society patterned in mythology. Others are like parrots who have been taught to repeat the myth so often they begin to be-lieve it's real.

We hear some of these myths all over the country. As a speaker on current affairs, they appear during question and answer periods from a more informed seg-ment of our society. We can only imagine the reactions of the less informed.

There is the myth going around that Republicans prevented a fair shake for our Negro citizens for years. The fact is that Republi-cans under Eisenhower gave the Negro the first civil rights bill since the Emanci-nation Preclamatic only real meaning to a tax reduction is to effect a cor-responding reduction in govpation Proclamation.

responding reduction in gov-ernment spending. The "economic quacks" obviously pushed tax rate reductions mainly for politi-cal purposes. They assume that most taxpayers are nit-wits and can't see through it all Some areas of the civil rights bill are workable, some are not. Street mobs are hurting, not helping, the rightful cause of the Negro citizens by actions and de-mands which create national resentment to the point that it all. The impact of govern-ment upon the economy is resentment to the point that enforcement and acceptance of important rights will be jeopardized.

Conservatives in both par-ties, with few exceptions in the South, have always supported certain rights other-wise denied our Negro citizens.

The "mythologists" con-demn conservatism, and yet conservatism is the philos-ophy of moderation. It sup-ports change that comple-ments American traditional liberties — and opposes change that curtails these liberties.

liberues. Change is not necessarily improvement. But for good or evil change is inevitable. The world changes. Princi-ples should not. They re-main as guidelines for free-dom and free men dom and free men. "Liberals" in the political, not classical, sense have less respect for private initia-tive. Almost by reflex they call on government to solve problems. Almost by reflex they do not believe the pri-vale sector can do the job as well. Almost by reflex they want to subjugate free initiative for public initiative.

Of course, both liberals and conservatices see the same problems. The liberals instinctively seek govern-ment machinery. Conserva-tives instinctly seek private machinery. "Ask not what your coun-try can do for you, but what you can do for your country

Liberals give it only lip service. They say that only when the private sector fails do they turn to government. determined by the extent of its spending. Taxes are sim-ply the means of obtaining the money to finance this spending. When spending remains the same, or is in-creased, and tax rates re-duced, then the money has to come from some place

This is just not so. But it is this argument that will spark the current political debate. The nation has been sold a bill of goods that the lat-est tax reduction will im-prove the nation's economy. That we will have more money to spend. We have been led to believe also that, since taxes were re-duced, government expento come from some place else. And the biggest "quack" is INFLATION. Proof is in the increase of the public debt limit to $324 billion. duced, government expen-ses "will be reduced in time."

17 12

Heavier government spending increases the burden on taxpayers, and lower taxes do not make it less. The

Any stimulant that the productive forces of the economy may receive from a reduction in tax rates is time." These "quacks" have sud-denly discovered a new "law of economics" — that taxes can be reduced without the necessity of reducing spend-ing. As a matter of fact, un-der this new "quack law" government can even in-increase spending while re-ducing taxes. This is absurd. more than counteracted by the impact of this additional inflation. We are now experiencing

0

0

We are now experiencing another "quack illusion" of prosperity. Lower taxes and greater government spend-ing is stimulating present economic expansion. But the "quacks" don't tell you that this combina-tion has always spelled in-flation and rising prices. As long as government oper-ates on this dangerous as-sumption, deficits will in-crease, not decrease, result-ing in the loss of purchas-ing power of every dollar in the pocket or in the bank. This means business costs will rise and profits will fail and we're back where we (Continued on B-11)

Our Man Hoppe New Delegate System Touted

By Arthur Hoppe

Now that the conventions are over, it is time to build for the future. And what I'm building for the future is an All-Purpose Stuffed Delegate.

For, as anyone who's been in Atlantic City all week can tell you, the only official duties of an offi-cial delegate in these days of television are three: It must make noise, it must wave placards and it must above all-help fill the empty seats. The vision of a speaker adressing empty, unlistening seats is the nightmare of all convention managers. Which is realwhy we have delegates. Who don't listen, either.

So delegates are desperately needed. But, obviously, a neat, cheaply-constructed all-purpose stuffed delegate could perform these functions far more efficiently and economically than fallible human delegates. The party will save millions; those in control of the convention will be assured an enthusiastically harmonious vote on all motions; and it's doubtful anyone but cab drivers and bartenders will note the difference. * * *

Best of all, this will save untold wear and tear on the frail human delegates who now must devote four long days to performing these arduous mechanical chores. And who hate every minute of it.

It probably isn't generally known that human delegates despise conventions, but all you have to do is talk to them. Their reservations are fouled up, they can't see or hear from their seats, every party they crash is overcrowded, they can't get a cab, a table or a girl, they despise whatever city they are convened in, and their hotel room is not only miles from anything, but it is a direct insult.

Indeed, at the recent festivities in Alantic City, the California Delegation was quartered at the Ambassador, which might be described as a stately old hotel. If it were more stately.

And prizes were finally offered to the delegates with the most heartrending tales of woe, most of which involved doorknobs falling off, thereby locking people in bathrooms. First prize was a week in Atlantic City. Second prize was two weeks in Atlantie City.

* * * But you can't blame delegates for being gru Here they've taken a week off from work and spent hundreds of dollars in some place they can't abide, being constantly pushed and shoved around in order to perform three simple mechanical functions for the television cameras that an All-Purpose Stuffed Delegate could handle much better. Yes, there's no doubt the human delegate is on his way out. At long last, thanks to our fast-advancing technology, man will soon be relieved of the dreary burden of suffering through boring, tawdry, artifically staged political conventions in the flesh. Yet it's odd, the few delegates I've approached with the idea have been strangely unenthusiastic about being saved. Frankly, I'm beginning to suspect they're already looking forward to attending the next boring tawdry, artificially staged convention. And, come to think of it, so am I.

BOOKS by William Hogan Frank Look at Momism

Bruce Jay Friedman is Hindu? You could be a is fine; Joseph and the sound au thor of Sioux Indian for all they others are fine, and as an "Stern," a widely discussed care. Stop worrying about first novel of a year or so yourself for a change. The man is worth a thousand ago that dealt with anti- Jew thing should be my hours of television.

cast reporters' coverage of campaigns and campaigners also continues to wax hot. Set off by former President Eisenhower's remarks a b o u t "sensation-seeking columnists and commentators" at the recent Republican convention in San Francisco and fired by complaints from others, the de-bate has now drawn the at-tention of those charged with unfairness by the politicos.

Ar Ar Ar In a special election-year survey of editors and broad-cast news directors by The Quill, the magazine for journalists published by Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalistic so-ciety 52 per cent of those ciety, 52 per cent of those responding expressed con-cern over continuing challenges of the "impartiality" of political reporters.

Among those who noted a cause for concern was Alex-become advocates or at least commentators. I think least commentators. I think every political reporter should be deprived of his byline for substantial periods as a catharsis."

Robert C. Notson of the Portland Oregonian noted "there are political re porters who are tending to choose up sides in the con-tests they are covering and this has been reflected in some of the writings."

"We need a better defibetween personal opinion and objective observation and reporting," Notson held that

"A reporter may try to make his end product com-pletely impartial, but if he is a good reporter he is also a most passionate, intelli-gent human being," de-clared Ralph Renick of WTVJ-TV, Miami, Florida. of

"The test of his profes-work to assure that they are being impartial. "But I also think a high percentage of the charges are baseless," said Kenneth MacDonald of the Des Moines Register and Tri-bune. "In the heat of a poli-tical campaign most pertical campaign, most per-sons don't want impartial-ity; they want preferential treatment for their candi-Most outspoken dissenter to a need for concern by the news media was John

McCormally of the Hutchin-

McCormally of the Hutchin-son, Kansas, News. "I think modern-day journalists spend too much time worrying about receiv-ing approval," the editor held. "If someone isn't damning the political re-porter, it's a good sign he isn't writing anything with guts, stepping on any ties."

Semitism. A second novel, "A Mother's Kisses" (Simon first worry and I'd be rid-& Schuster; $4.95), is a complete switch. The action is limited, but it is all very & ing on velvet." Mama has a great and strong role in all this, a new kind of Mama role. She tent in the

here kinds for an an this, a new kind of Mama role. She is a sexy, fast-talking, ir-resistible character called Meg — and as long as we're reaching all over the place for comparisons, she's Shel-ley Winters. Meg watches over her Joseph, who is turned down by a couple of colleges; gets a job as a summer camp waiter; is confused by sex. Many things here have happened before in funny stories about boys, especially New York Jewish boys, but sud-denly it is all engagingly new. funny. The book is about a New York teen-ager and his viva-cious Mom. The talk is won-derful, like the talk in some of Bernard Malamud's stories, or in Philip Roth's. Not dialect talk, understand; but affectionate broad, flavor-some, Bronxy stuff that may remind you of Elick Moll's "Seidman and Son" or some of Paddy Cheyevsky's plays.

Friedman's style is mer-curial, mint-fresh and many cuts above the Molly Gold-berg kind of American Jew-ish folk opera we have been overexposed to in recent years. "You're such a child; you are such an infant,' Mama tells Joseph at one point. "Who's looking at you? Do they know if you're a

Also entertainment: "The Also entertainment: "The Third Day," a novel of sus-pense by Joseph Hayes, au-thor of "The Desperate Hours" and other notable thrillers. This is a story of amnesia — and before you say you have heard all this before, let me add that it is also a novel of manners It involves emotional the involves emotional shock, crackup and other standard ingredients, but but staged with verve and style. It is about a man's recognition of himself, clue by clue, as a fog slowly lifts from his mind and of his of disappointment the fellow he finds. This is

new. "A Mother's Kisses" is more than delicatessen. a tricky theme, and Joseph Hayes handles it with the finesse of Alfred Hitchcock is his most inventive film literary camp lamuds, Philip making period. A conjurer's trick; literary show busi-ness, if you like. Also melowith the Malamuds, Philip Roths and J. D. Salingers, and leaves the Henry Ald-rich-Dobie Gillis crowd back with the Beatles. Mama-Meg drama at its most suave and satisfactory (McGraw - Hill,

Morning Report:

Abe Mellinkoff is on vacation. His Morning Report will be continued in the Press-Herald on his return.

Abe Mellinkoff